The creator had made her very beautiful and no other woman was given so much beauty. Then a trader (man) came there, (a well embellished man) who was more handsome than the queen even. (2)

When the queen saw his beauty, then she was struck by the arrows of love (Kamdev). That woman was enamoured by him, and she forgot all about her household affairs. (3)

She sent an affectionate handmaid and called him there. She had cohabitation with him. She had many types of poses of love along with kisses and cohabitation. (4)

The queen was pleased with the paramour and explained to him like this. She told him to go to a wilderness and then establish himself-there (be seated). (5)

He should should rub ash on his whole body and seated underneath a tree, he should be in a meditation posture. (She said), "I will come there along with the Raja and then take you home by some means." (6)

The paramour accepted the queen's proposal and dressed himself as a mendicant (Sadhu). Then he sat under a tree. Then the queen told the Raja, like this. (7)

"I had a dream, while I was asleep, that Maha Rudra had come to my house, who woke me up with his foot and then through his kindness he had addressed me like this." (8)

"O Raja! I am telling you one thing, which you should keep in mind. A great Rishi had come to the jungle, and there was no parallel to him (in the town)." (9)

You go there along with the Raja and bring him home. Then sleep with him for twelve years, and without any doubt, a son will be born to you. There is no other doubt about it." (she said). (10)

"That Muni was a great celibate and do not consider him as likely to perish. Even women like Rambha (fairies) had tried their best, but that Muni never faltered from his celibacy. (11)

"(O Raja!) so let us both go there and by some means arrange to bring that Muni home by requesting him and bowing at his feet,let him sleep with me for twelve years and then without any doubt you will get a son born to us." (12)

On hearing these words, the Raja stood up and went to the Jungle, along with the queen, where the trees were reaching upto the sky. The jungle was very dreadful, which is beyond description." (13)

The Raja came there, along with the queen and saw the Muni there. He made his obeisance to him, along with the queen and had thought in his mind. (14)

"Whatever Shiva had told her in the dream has been seen by me as true. So let us take him home by some means and then make him sleep with the queen." (15)

The more the Raja was bowing to him, the more he was keeping his eyes closed (without opening) then he asked him, "What for have you come here and why have you brought your wife along with you?" (16)

"O Raja! What is the use of this wealth, which you are showing us? We do not visit any homes and only meditate on the Lord in the Jungle." (18)

The Raja replied to the Muni, "Kindly visit the Raja's house, and cast away our great sins. Stay there for twelve years, with us, through your kindness and then come back to the jungle again." (19)

When the Raja requested him time and again, then the Muni said to him, "O Raja! What is the use of our presence in your palace? Why are you touching my feet time and again?" (20)

The Raja then replied," Shiva had told us personally aboutyou and sent us here by awakening us from our sleep. So, accepting the Shiva's orders, you stay at our place for twelve years." (21)

When the Muni heard about Shiva's heavenly voice, thenthe Muni accepted the proposal to go home with them. He came with the Raja and then entered the palace along with the queen. (22)

The Raja placed before him many eatables (food material)and seeing them, the Rishi said, "What is the use of this food to us? These are things meant for the householders only." (23)

"We do not look at the women and do not eat such richFoods by mistake even. Except the Lord's true Name ,nothing else is of any avail. The Vedas and Katebs tell us only these secrets." (24)

Then the Raja accepted him as a True Muni. That fool didnot gauge the depth of the secret move. He made him sleep with the queen, thus got himself cheated outright (got himself shaved off). (25)

The foolish Raja would spread the bed sheets personally adoring the bed and then make him sleep with the queen; thinking him a great celibate, but the fool did not realize the secret motive. (26)

When the queen saw that the spouse was not watching them, then she would enjoy sensuous pleasure with him to her satisfaction. He was given a lot of hemp and opium and the woman would have cohabitation with him for twelve hours.(four pehars). (27)

That woman then thought in her mind and covered herself with a quilt. The Raja was serving him, while the Muni, under cover of quilt was having sexual relations with her. (28)

Through this deceit the queen had gained her paramour and the foolish Raja did not know the secret. The Raja, sitting on the other side of cot would try to serve him, while the paramour was enjoying sensuous pleasure with the queen. (29)

Thus the queen had deceived the spouse with this trick and the paramour was having sexual relations with the queen in his presence. The foolish Raja could not gauge the secret and was deceived by the woman. (30)

With this deceit the queen had deceived the husband, and the paramour was enjoying sensuous pleasure in the Raja's presence. The Raja never understood the secret of this move, and was thus cheated by the woman. (31)

There was a mighty Raja, by the name of Chanchal Sain, who had no parallel to him (in beauty). He had a wife called Chanchal Dei and neither a godly woman nor a godly princess was there to compare with her. (1)

They begot a son, who died at the age of twenty, and the queen was very sad and gloomy, so that she lost all her sense of proportion. (3)

A Shah's son came there and he was so glamorous as if he was a personification of glory or glamour. He was having a similar personality as the queen's son, and be looked alike him. (4)

When the queen saw that man, then being forgetful of her modesty she thought to herself that either she should have a love affair with him or she should die by stabbing herself with a dagger. (5)

When that youth would pass that way, the queen would go to watch him. One day the Raja saw her (watching him) and told her like this. (6)

"What for have you come here and whom are you watching? "Then the queen said, "O Rajan! You listen to my words." (7)

The foolish Raja did not grasp the secret behind it and he himself sent for that youth. He himself became a middle man (mediator) and did not bother about good or bad (things). (9)

He acted like a middle man without having any thought of good or evil action. The queen was saved of sending a messenger as the Raja himself acted as an emissary. (10)

She would make him sleep near her bed and would give him nice food to eat, saying "that he was resembling her son in form and beauty, so she liked his company." (11)

If any other woman would feed him, then the queen would get annoyed with her. "He had a similar personality as my son, so he should be fed with nice food." (12)

She would make him sleep close to her and spread her bed near him. When the Raja would go to sleep (along with her), she would have a sexual relationship with him. (13)

She would clasp him closely and have cohabitation with him by crushing his limbs and would enjoy sensuous pleasure with him in many ways and would go to sleep embracing him closely. (14)

One day the queen went to her paramour and the proud Raja also woke up from his slumber and he saw her kissing his face. He became furious with rage and cursed her. (15)

Couplet

The queen said, "I have called him my son, so I have great affection (love) for him, as such I had kissed him as my son. (16)

Choupaiee

The Raja also thought to himself that she might have gone to kiss him (his face) thinking him as her son, so the Raja got rid of his rage. The fool did not see through the secret behind it. (17)

Couplet

With this deceit, she kept Bangam Rai at her place,the woman would call him her son during day time and would have cohabitation with him at night. (18)

Here the two hundred and ninety-fifth episode of the King's & Minister's dialogue regarding woman's witchcraft from Charitar Pakhyan is completed. All is well. (295-5638) (Contd.)

There was a Raja by the name of Bangas Sain of (the town of) Bangas, who had all sorts of materials at home. He had a queen called Bangas Dei. On seeing her all the women of the three worlds would feel jealous (of her beauty). (1)

There lived a Shah's daughter also, who was very beautiful, clever and having a fair complexion. Her name was Mangla Dei and even Kamdev's wife (Rati) was no match to her in beauty. (2)

A merchant happened to come there, who had thousands of camels loaded with pearls and he had no dearth of other wealth also. Who-so-ever (woman) would glance at him, would get enamoured by him . (3)

Aril

When Mangla Dei saw the merchant, then the clever woman thought to herself. She called him at home and played a host to him and a news was spread around that her brother had come there. (4)

She got lot of food preparations made, and got many types of drugs and kept before him in a plate of gold, she got wine extracted by the wine dealers seven times. (5)

First he had hemp (bhang) and then he had his food and then took wine in large tumblers. When he got drunk with both the drugs, then the woman did like this. She pulled him up and placed him on her bed. (6)

Then she told him, "Let us have a sexual relationship and get rid of the sexual fever by enjoying sensuous pleasure in many ways." Then woman said, "I am young and you are equally young, then why are you surprised? Let us enjoy sensuous pleasure today. (7)

Choupaiee

The Shah did not agree to the woman's proposal. As such Mangla got annoyed too much. She became furious with rage, forgetting her love (for him) and tore him into two pieces. (8)

She looted all his wealth and remarked, "This sinner had committed a great sin and then added, "he had been torn into two pieces by a drunken elephant and no person came forward to save him from the elephant." (by pushing him away). (9)

The king of Delhi Shamas Din was very young and many countries accepted his suzerainty. One day he went on a hunting spree towards a jungle, the den of lions. He saw a lioness there. (3)

The king went himself to the place where he had seen the lioness. He took Sidhpal along with him and took many soldiers with him. (4)

He directed his elephant towards the lioness. She had given birth to a male cub. Infact, the cub was half in the womb and he pierced his nails into the body (forehead) of the elephant. (5)

A bard saw this wonderous drama and recited a couplet for the king to hear. "O dear! I am saying something which the king never forgot in his life." (6)

When the bard recited this rhyme, which was heard by the king. When he came back to his palace, he sent for Sidh Pal. (8)

The king then told him, "You are my able minister, so you should make some arrangement (think of some means) so that I could get my Padmini (woman). (9)

Sidh pal then replied, "O king! Listen to my words! You call your army and send me to Singladeep. (10)

If you permit me, then I will go there with a huge army and then wage a war in Singla deep, thus managing to bring Padmini along with me somehow. (11)

When the Raja went home after saying like this, then many trumpets were sounded. There was an enemy of Sidh Pal there and he told the king about the secret of Sidh Pal. (12)

"That Sidh Pal had a daughter and even a fairy or Padmini was no match to her in beauty. So you call her here through someone and see (for yourself). After that only you should try to find out from Singladeep." (13)

Firstly she was clever, secondly a painter, as if she was another form (copy) of Kamdev. She was fair complexioned and was munching betel nut. It seemed as if the moon had appeared in the sky. (15)

That messenger went to her house and came back with a painting made of her. When the king saw that painting by taking it in his hand, it appeared as if he was hit by kamdev with a dagger. (he was aroused with sexual desires). (16)

He lost his senses and started dancing around in a drunken state. It seemed as if he was wounded, and a hurt person was moving around. He had no sense of his body even, as if he was stung by a cobra. (poisonous snake). (17)

One day the king arranged for a feast and all the women from the town were invited. When Sidh Pal's daughter came, then it appeared as if lamps had been lit in the whole assembly (it was illumined with her presence). (18)

The king called all Pathans and sent them to Sidh Pal's house. A message was delivered to him (Sidh Pal), "either give away your daughter to me or be prepared to face death." (20)

All the Pathans went to his house and gave the message of the king, saying, "0 Sidh Pal! You are very fortunate that the king would be coming to your house." (21)

When Sidh Pal heard this, then being distressed he struck his forehead (with the hand) and thought to himself, "what had the Lord done to him?" I have got such a trouble-some daughter. (22)

"If I do not hand over the daughter, then there will be trouble. (The king will be annoyed) and if I give her away, then it will be shameful for the Kashatriyas, as no Kashatriya woman had gone to a Mughal's Pathan's)Turk's house (in marriage) so far. (23)

It had not happened so far that a Kashatriya woman (daughter) had been given over to the Turks. The Rajputs had (of course) been doing it, that they had given their daughters to Malechhas (muslims). (24)

But either Indians or Kashatriyas had never given away their daughters to the Turks. If any Kashatriya were to do such an act, then he would be thrown into the abyss of hell. (25)

If any man gave his daughter to the Turks, the whole world would curse him. If any Kashatriya gave away his daughter to the Turks, he would be a loser both here and hereafter (in this world and the next). (26)

The Indians a had never given away their daughter to Turks, neither a Kashadiya woman had become a Turkish wife. Some Rajputs had lost their honour and their women had become begums or queens (of Turks) (have decided). (27)

Now I feel in my mind that being enraged "I should wage a war like a warrior. Let me, arm myself with coats of mail and taking a sword in hand, I should kill those horsemen by picking them out one by one. (28)

Then the father called his daughter and discussed it with her.The daughter said, "O dear father! Do not worry at all and fight it out with the king." (29)

"Do not leave the sword from your hand and be brave to take the strike of a sword. O dear father! Start the war and keep steady in fighting it out and never run away (give in). With the shooting of arrows, kill these horsemen. First kill the enemies, then kill me also and then die fighting yourself also." (31)

Choupaiee

"O dear father! Listen. I will make an effort, and will call Shamas Din at home. When he would come, kill him then." Then you may wage a war with the enemy. (32)

Then Sidh Pal also thought that the daughter had given a good advice. He came out of his palace and explained to the Pathans accordingly. (33)

"These kings are made by the Lord, and people like us are made their slaves (at their beck and call). Whatever the king has said, is acceptable to me and (accept) take his orders with great honour? (34)

Then all the Pathans went back to the king, and were overjoyed at heart. The Kashatriyas had never given their daughters to the Turks, but these people have accepted our offer, so it is a welcome sign. (This is a good thing, now we will make fun of them). (35)

On this side, the daughter explained to the father, "That we will not be born again as a Kashatriya, and so far no woman from Kashatriya's, house had gone to the Turks." (36)

So "O dear father! You do not hand me over to the king, and start waging a war in the morning itself. This anecdote will be remembered by the world forever. By the next morning either Pathans will lose or Kashatriyas will not be alive." (37)

"Wear your protective Coats of mail and sound the battle drums, then get drunk with the drugs (like hemp and wine). A great battle will be fought in the morning, which will be a dreadful war." (38)

"The war will surely be waged against the king, so all should wear yellow coloured dresses (clothes). Take opium and start trotting your horses and brandish your shining spears." (39)

"First forget about your own safety, and then wield the sword fearlessly. Take some poppy husk, hemp and opium and showyour warrior skills on this sandy tract." (40)

The king came there with his army, and came prepared for the marriage ceremony. When they reached Sidh Pal's house, Then the woman spoke like this. (41)

If an enemy were to come in the house, he should not be killed, then she advised them that he should be killed while leaving." Lachhman (his son) was made to sit in the planquin (dressed as a woman), and seven hundred Kashatriya warriors (dressed as women) were sent along with him.(42)

Choupaiee

When they had left the house, then they reached his palace, then the king placed his hand forward in great love, and Lachhman, with his dagger, killed him. (43)

He was stabbed with the dagger in such a manner, that he could not utter a word. After killing him, he took up the form of a man, and told the people like this. (44)

"The king has sent me to bring some drug and has ordered you not to enter the palace. If anyone would enter, he will lose his life." (45)

So with this deceit, he came out of the entrance, and no guard stopped him. Once he reached near his own forces, then there was lot of turmoil." (46)

Bugles of joy (merriment) were sounded, and their sound reached all the three worlds. Many musical instruments like drums, mirdang, muchang, kettle drums, lyres and clarionets started playing their musical tunes. (47)

Couplet

Bugles of triumph and joy were sounded, and the Maru tune (death like tune) was heard, then all the Khans launched an attach. (48)

"Who is this warrior son of a woman, who has sounded the war drums? Who is this mad fool, who does not realize the situation?" (49)

Thus all the Pathans came for launching the attack and came in groups with great joy. They all came to the place, where Shamasdin had been killed by Lachhman. (50)

Many warriors, including Lodhis, Sur, Niazis, came running there, then Drodajee (Pathans tribe) Ruhailas, Afridis came trotting their horses. (51)

The horse riders could not be accommodated there, and the warriors were trotting their horses, and the arrows were being shot in a stream (like a storm), so that one could not see clearly.(53)

So there was great turmoil and noise in the town. It appeared the sun had gone topsy turvy or there was a tide (high and low) in the ocean or the fish were dying coming out of the ocean. (54)

Just as a boat were being washed away in a river without a boatman to protect it, the town had become like that without a saviour. It seemed as if Sachi had no one like Indra to protect her. (55)

When the Pathans came rushing with arrows fixed on stretched bows, the Kashatriyas also attacked with fury. From both the sides, the arrows were being shot with such a force that once those arrows pierced a human body, then these could not be pulled out. (57)

Then Lachhman, getting furious with rage, killed most of the leading Pathans with his weapons. At some places the warriors were lying being cut into pieces just as Indra's flags were lying around broken into pieces in the battlefield. (58)

The warriors lying dead in the battlefield appeared like the drunken men lying down having consumed hemp (bhang); at places the heads of elephants were scattered around in pieces, while at some other places the camels were seen crushed into pieces in the battlefield. While at places the naked swords and double-edged swords were seen flashing around. (59)

At some places the warriors, cut into pieces with the piercing of arrows, were lying around just as a farmer had taken out pieces of sugarcane for sowing in his field. At places, a dagger fixed into a stomach was shining just like a fish fluttering being caught in a net. (60)

In the battlefield somewhere the horses with bellies cut open) were lying around while elsewhere drunken elephants or horses without riders were moving around. Somewhere Shiva was seen making a necklace of skulls, while elsewhere ghosts, evil spirits and betals were dancing around. (61)

Somewhere the demons with large teeth showing out of mouths, were moving around, while at places warriors were lying dead in the battlefield with blood spurting out of their wounds. At places crowns were scattered or coats of mail or scabbards were lying around just as a tailor had spread around him cut pieces of cloth for sewing in the winter season. (62)

The blood was oozing out of wounded horses and elephants in streams just as water sprinkles out of fountains. It seemed as if a second doomsday had come when millions of warriors were lying dead all around. (63)

Millions of cut trunks of elephants were lying around, along with many dead warriors and flags cut into pieces were scattered all around. At places, young horse-riders were frothing their horses, with melodies of songs of death (Maru Rag) being heard, with a loud music produced all around. (64)

At places, the sound of conch-shells or clarionets was being heard, while at places the Rajas (warriors) were patting their huge arms while laughing and roaring all around. At places huge drums were being sounded and at places Rajas with canopies overhead were established firmly in the battlefield. (65)

At places the Maru Rag of huge kettle drums, clarionets and other musical instruments was being produced, while at places lyres and flutes were playing in a beautiful manner. At places (musical instruments) like Kuchang, mirdang, upang and muchang were being played. (66)

The battle fought underneath the loft was so furious which was not seen before among the gods and demons even. Even the battle fought between Ram and Ravana was not so furious nor such a furious battle took place in Mahabharta earlier (by Bhim). (67)

Many warriors were standing there shouting aloud and bragging while elsewhere arrows were being shot, while at places people were arming themselves with weapons. At places, warriors dressed as women were fleeing, leaving their houses behind. (68)

Many Pathans had been routed, and many were killed in the battlefield. Many Kashatriyas had been trampled by the horses in the battlefield. Where smart warriors had been killed there Sidh Pal came himself making (protective) circles around them. (69)

When the Pathans saw Sidh Pal, then none of them could keep hold of his weapons (out of fear). Many had fled away and many had been killed in the battlefield. It appeared as a strong gust of wind had uprooted many old trees of plas. (70)

All the stubborn warriors, engaged in fighting in the battlefield, had been killed, and many had been defeated and thrown into the fort. Many had been rounded up (tied down), while many were let off. Many were killed and many had been saved even. (71)

Whosoever had drawn out his sword, was killed instantly, and whosoever ran away from there, got saved. How far could I give details, the battle was very horrible and frightful. On the clattering of (iron) swords, the Kashatriyas became furious with rage. (72)

At places, (Narsinghe) drums were sounded, and somewhere conch shells were being blown: somewhere youths had died fighting and the fairies were wedding the warriors (being killed). Somewhere warriors were wielding their swords. Somewhere warriors were roaring while elsewhere they were fleeing. (73)

When Sidh Pal had killed all the Pathans having snatched away their crown, horses and war drums, then many from distant lands came there, and Sidh Pal was surrounded from all the four sides. (74)

The number of Pathans, who had run away, were replaced by these (new) Pathans, and were thundering on all four sides of Sidh Pal and said, "O Kashatriya! Where will you run now? We will not allow you to escape, and will kill you soon in this battlefield. (75)

On hearing these words, the warrior became furious with rage, and was fully armed with all weapons and was adept in wielding them. Then he ordered the whole army just as Ram had ordered the army of monkeys. (76)

On hearing Sidh Pal's words, the whole army, with arms and coats of mail, advanced forward and killed all the Pathans, who opposed them in the battlefield, and many were thrown in the moat of the fort, after being killed. (77)

Somewhere those warriors, who were shooting arrows, were lying upside down along with their horses, while somewhere warriors were engrossed in shooting arrows, while elsewhere Kashatriyas with drawn swords were trotting their horses at the place where mighty warriors were engaged in fighting. (78)

Somewhere large drums were sounding Maru Rag (music of death), while somewhere mighty Rajas were engaged in fighting, while the naked swords of Kashatriyas were being wielded, as if the fire (flames) of doomsday was blowing. (79)

Somewhere the iron rings to be fixed on forehead were lying scattered broken (cut) along with broken helmets at places. Somewhere the iron coats of mail of kings were lying scattered, while at places broken shields of warriors were lying (scattered) down in the battlefield and at places fly whisks were lying down on the ground as if swans were looking glorious. (80)

At places, broken flags, were shining on the ground as if large trees were lying broken due to a storm, while elsewhere horses cut into two pieces were lying along with elephants cut into pieces. (81)

Many were lying in the pools of blood, or warriors lying reeling on the ground. Somewhere elephants and royal horses were lying killed on the ground. Many warriors had fled away and were hiding in plants. Their backs had signs of wounds, and were not taking out their heads (in the open). (82)

Some warriors, while fleeing, had their hair caught in trees and were crying out with the fear of being caught by the enemy and to be saved. With their drawn swords, they were not looking back, while the Kazis were running away; without caring for their horses'safety. (83)

At places, the Pathans were crushed badly, and they were not caring for their horses even. Some were changing into female dresses (discarding their dress) and some were requesting for their safety by offering money in lieu to him, who was carrying a sword. (84)

Many soldiers, saving their skin, were running away while many had joined in groups in the battlefield. Some warriors had offered their bodies for sacrifice in the fire of battlefield while some were thinking it as a great sin, to be fleeing away from there, thus they had died fighting, being cut into pieces. (85)

Those warriors, who had died facing the enemy in the battlefield, were wedded by the fairies of heaven, and a similar number had been dispatched to hell and those virtuous types without the use of drugs, (like opium, hemp etc.) were killed while fleeing from there. (86)

Many coward warriors were found dead without being killed (struck) and fell down due to fear without being struck by the arrows. Many had given up their lives by advancing forward or many had followed the path to heavens. (87)

Many miserly and virtuous types were running away and were killed and were eaten away by vultures etc and were not consigned to flames (by tying up). There was a great holocast and a fierce battle was fought, and seeing the mighty warriors (standing against them) the cowards were trembling. (88)

Where Sidh Pal had killed many enemies, other warriors were seen vacating the fort, and running away without holding on to their weapons. They had seen Shamas Din lying dead on the ground. (89)

The bards were singing songs, standing there and were trying to frighten away the enemy or making it heard to the Master. At places drums were being sounded and clarionets or lyres being played, including ransinghe while the mighty Rajas were thundering and laughing while showing their prowess. (90)

When all the Pathans were killed in the battlefield and not a single warrior out of those proud ones was left alive and having killed the king of Delhi he (Sidh Pal) usurped the kingdom of Delhi, and a canopy was fluttering over his head. (91)

When Sidh Pal had crushed most of the enemy forces, the remnants got scattered here and there. Thus Diwan Sidh Pal took over control of the kingdom and a canopy started fluttering over his head. Whosoever accepted his superiority got saved, but others who opposed him, were killed. (92)

Then taking control of the kingdom and having killed the king, he thought to himself that he had not performed a virtuous deed. He lay awoke throughout the night and was thinking about himself. He thought of handing over the control of the kingdom to anyone whom he would meet in the morning. (93)

In the morning, a servant of a butcher happened to come there, who was going to the river for throwing the waste material. He caught hold of him and handed over the kingdom to him. He was named as Jain-alavadi. (94)

Having handed over the kingdom to him, then Sidh Pal along with his daughter proceeded to the Jungle, and clad as a mendicant along with the daughter he went to Badri Nath. (95)

Couplet

After performing great penance there, then the(mother) goddess appeared before her, and said, "O daughter! Whichever person you prefer, you could ask for him as your spouse." (96)

Choupaiee

(She said), "O Mother! Give, me this boon only that a Kashatriya woman should never go to a Turk's house (never become their wife) and protect me in future also. O world's Mother! Bestow me with this benediction." (97)

"I should always be meditating on you, bowing at your lotus-feet and there should be enough wealth at home." (He begged)! No enemy should have an upper hand over us, and O Mother! I should always be worshipping you by meditating on you." (98)

The goddess mother bestowed these boons on him and made him the Raja of Assam, where he was ruling till to date without caring for the Delhi king." (99)

She developed great love for him and had become one (body) with him (completely enamoured by him) when she could not meet him, she dressed up like a man. (4)

Couplet

She dressed up like a hunter, and went to his house. All were considering her a male, and no one thought her to be a female. (5)

Choupaiee

She used to take out the prince for hunting spree and would ask him to kill many types of deer (wild animals). Having dressed up like a man, she would be roaming alone along with him. (6)

One day she did riot return home and sent the message to the father that his daughter had died. She consigned to flames one goat in place of herself and no one else could gauge the secret. (7)

The Shah thought that the daughter had died, but did not realize that she had become a huntress, she would accompany the Raja's son daily to the jungle and after roaming around she would come back. (8)

Thus she spent lot of time in this activity and made the prince very happy. Ile did not realize that she was a woman. He thought him (her) to be a good hunter only. (9)

One day they went inside a thick jungle and there was no other companion with them. The day had passed and night had fallen. So they stayed underneath a tree by making some arrangement. (10)

A huge lion came there and his horrible teeth were to be seen. On seeing him the Raja's son got frightened. But the Shah' daughter consoled him with patience (to be patient). (11)

The huntress then killed him with her gun and before the very eyes of the prince she had shot him dead. Then the prince remarked, "O hunter! Whatever you want you could demand from me." (12)

Then the girl, turned into a male hunter, told him the whole story, saying, "0 Prince! I am the daughter of Shah and I have developed love for you and I have dressed up like this." (13)

"Now you have sensuous pleasure with me and take me home as your wife. Just as I have loved you, you also take me as your beloved." (14)

The prince was pleased with her, and It seemed as if Ram had gained his Sita, or a hungry man had got food or Demayanti had met Nal. (15)

So he had a sexual companionship with her under the tree and had cohabitation in many ways. The tiger's skin was removed and placed it underneath themselves, making it as their bedspread, where they had cohabitation. (16)

The prince named her as fairy and made it known that she had been pleased to wed him. With this deceit, he brought her home as his wife. The father Roopket could not see through the secret. (17)

Couplet

With this trick he brought her home as his wife. All were thinking her as a fairy and not a woman. (18)

By becoming a hunter, she managed to marry the prince, and became a queen from a helpless person. So she was established as a queen on top of everyone. (19) (1)

There was a Raja named Chander Choor, who had a wife, called Amit Prabha. She had no other parallel to her (in beauty)in the world. On seeing her even the women or snake (females) were feeling ashamed. (1)

There was a rich Shah and there was no other wealthy person like him in the world. He had a daughter named Achhal Dei and she was very intelligent, having knowledge like Pandits (had stolen the knowledge of Brahmins). (2)

Chander Choor had a son, who was expert in grammar and various Shastras. His name is beyond description and if we were to write with a pen having length of sugarcane, it would be reduced in size while writing his name. (3)

One day the prince went on a hunting spree and he saw the Shah's daughter. He also got enamoured by her, while the girl was fully engaged in his love only. (4)

She sent a clever handmaid to him so as to call the prince, by saying, "Please come to my house one day and have sensuous pleasure with me." (5)

Then the maid came to the prince and told him whatever the Shah's daughter had said. The paramour laughed and said, "You go and tell the beloved like this." (6)

So the handmaid came back and informed her accordingly; which surprised the young woman (Shah's daughter) on hearing this by mind and speech. She was feeling restless and she lost her hunger and sleep even." (9)

So long she did not go across the seas, she would not feel peace of mind. So the Kumari arranged to leave for that place and told the father about going on a pilgrimage." (10)

She made all the arrangements with pomp and show, and started off riding a horse. She reached Rameshwar soon and was thinking in her mind. (11)

She embarked a ship and then reached Singladeep. Where the Raja's palace was situated, she moved towards that side. (12)

She wore many types of ornaments and went there dressed as a man. When Avdhoot Mati saw her (him) then she took him to be a prince of some land. (13)

On seeing him the princess became under spell of sexual desires and her limbs were afire with love. She thought to herself of wedding him only else she would stab herself to death. (14)

She was looking at him with bowed head, then the woman, taking a chance, came there itself. By racing the horse, she reached there just as a tigress catches hold of a deer. (15)

By giving a jerk from the loft, she caught hold of her and tied him to the back. All the people got tired of lamenting, but no protest could save her. (16)

By tying her on the back, the woman raced her horse, and whosoever opposed her, was struck down with an arrow. So she brought her home having won her over. Then she sent the handmaid to the prince. (17)

And sent a message to him, " Whatever you had asked for, I have completed that job. O (dear) beloved! Now you fulfil your promise. First you take me away after wedding me and then you will gain her possession. (18)

One day all the queens got together and were talking among themselves. The foolish spouse had lost his senses. He said, "so what, if the queen has died." (what does it matter). (4)

The Raja was grieved over her loss so much that he lost all his sense of proportion. "The Rajas have normally many wives (women) but the spouse should live long enough." (5)

There was a wise handmaid, who said with a laugh, "I will help the Raja to get over his grief for the queen and shall arrange his meeting with you." (6)

She caught hold of a paramour and locked him in a small (store) room and said like this (so that Raja could hear). "This Raja's life be cursed, who does not distinguish between discretion and non- discretion."(7)

If a woman does cohabitation with some other man, and pleases her spouse with talk only; but if the Raja were to open her storeroom and see for himself then he would follow what is truth and falsehood. (8)

When the Raja heard this, then he unlocked the storeroom (cell) instantly; when the Raja saw that person inside, then he told him with great fury. (9)

The Queen had sexual relationship with him and both slept on the same cot and the Raja also came there in the meantime and saw both of them sleeping together. (4)

The woman woke up being distressed and threw her head cover (cloth) on the face of the husband and by the time, the Raja removed that piece of cloth, the paramour had fled away. (5)

When the Raja had removed the head-cover from his face, he caught hold of the queen and asked her, "Where had be gone, whom I had seen with you? Without your telling me the truth, I will not get rid of my doubt. (6)

"First you promise the safety of my life (pardoning me) and then you could hear the truth. O Master! "First you give me your word with holding my hand, then you hear my request (prayer)." (7)

The Lord had made you (defective eyes) squint-eyed, so that instead of one person, you were seeing double (two persons), so you must have seen some disturbed scene) (doubtful sight) and on seeing me, you took it to be two persons. (8)

The Raja got surprised on hearing the words of the queen and did not say anything to her and went back home tight-lipped and blamed his fate lines, so that his eyes had become blurred (defective). (9) (1)

Here the three hundred and one episode of the King's & the Minister's dialogue regarding woman's witchcraft from Charitar Pakhyan is completed. All is well.

There was a Shah (merchant) called Chhatar Sain, who had a daughter named Chhatar Dei, and there could be no match for her beauty whether in the present, past or future even. (2)

When she reached adolescent stage and her childhood prattle was over, she developed her breasts and it appeared, as if the artisan (Kamdev) had filled up his moulds (she developed her sexual desires). (3)

She then saw the prince named Abharu Sain, who looked so glamorous, which is beyond description and she developed love for him, which could not be lessened and her condition became like the parrot and the tube (which the parrot cannot leave for safety). (4)

She developed affection and liking for him in many ways, but how could I detail all those things? That woman would call him every day and would have sexual companionship with him to her satisfaction. (5)

For his sake, she killed her husband even and she dressed up like a widow. When she called the paramour at home, she explained to him the whole story. (6)

The paramour on hearing her words, became so terrified that he started cursing the woman. He thought to himself, that the woman, who had killed her spouse, could not care the least for him (and would not have his welfare at heart). (7)

Now the person, for whose sake she had killed the spouse, was also gone and could not become her own (friend). She thought to herself that such a friend was of no use and it would be better to kill him also. (8)

So she took out her sword in hand and struck his head with it with both the hands. The more the Raja was shouting and wailing, the more forcefully she struck him with the sword. (9)

"Sbe told the people that hardly two days had passed after the death of her spouse and people had started behaving like this. Without the presence of the spouse, it was a curse (for the woman)to in this world, where such vagabonds were trying their tricks." (10)

There was a mighty Raja by the name of Abharan Singh, by seeing whom even the sun would feel belittled (ashamed). He had a wife called Abharan Dei, who had been moulded out of various ornaments (she was very glamorous). (1)

The queen was entangled (in love) with a paramour and would have sexual relationship with him daily. One day the Raja also came to know about it, so he came to the woman's place to see it for himself. (2)

He caught hold of the queen's paramour there and killed him on the spot. He did not kill the wife considering her a woman, but forgot about her totally (he lost all love for her). (3)

After many years had gone by and the queen had also tried many tricks, but the Raja never came to her house. Then she tried another method. (4)

The queen dressed up like an ascetic woman and left her house also (for the jungle). When the Raja came there for his hunting spree, then seeing a deer, he raced his horse chasing him. (5)

He had gone out of town for many kilometers, and reached a place, where there was no human being to be seen. Being madly tired, he got down in a garden and the queen (in the garb of an ascetic) also reached there. (6)

She was dressed up like an ascetic woman, with matted hair tuft on the head and seeing her beauty, anybody would get allured by her, without having any hesitation (doubt) in mind. (7)

This woman also reached there and she met the Raja. On seeing her beauty, the Raja got allured by her and was thinking whether she was a human being or a snake woman. (8)

He asked her, "O queen! Who are you and whose form are you depicting? Tell me the truth, are you a fairy? Or are you the wife of Kamdev? Or are you the moon's princess?" (9)

He had a long discourse with her, discussing Vedas, grammar and Kok Shastra, and somehow the queen had won the heart of the Raja (won his love) and had wounded the spouse with the arrows of love (had brought him under her spell). (10)

The Raja was fully enamoured by her love on seeing her charming beauty. "He was thinking in his mind, if ever I could gain her possession (hand) then I would sacrifice myself on her for many ages (many lives to come). (11)

The Raja thus tried to placate the woman and kept her amused in many ways. He thought to himself that he should enjoy sensuous pleasure with her, so he told the queen like this. (12)

She got involved in love with someone, just as the rain falls in the month of Sawan (July), and his name was Chatur Kumar. He could not be compared with any other man, being incomparable.(3)

Bidhya Dei, due to her joy, called him at home forcefully and had a sexual relationship with him and both the man and woman enjoyed it. (4)

Somebody informed Bidhi Sain about it, that your daughter had called her paramour at her place. She had cohabitation with him and was not afraid of you even, O Rajan! (5)

Then the Raja, taking him along with, came there in great fury. When Bidhya Mati heard about it, then she got frightened along with her paramour. (6)

She got two holes made in the roof, in the side from where she expected them to come (were seen coming) both of them then passed their excreta, which fell on the Raja along with his messenger. (7)

Both of them became blind and could not see anything. From the same route, she sent away the paramour home. The Raja could not see through the secret of this. He thought that the daughter had gone out somewhere for some job (where had she gone after cohabitation)? (8)

The excreta was placed on both their heads and that man had gone by throwing this filth on their heads. In washing themselves they spent sometime (about half an hour) then they went to the daughter's house. (9)

On reaching there, the Raja did not see any paramour etc., so the Raja killed that man instead, on whose head the filth was thrown earlier. (10)

Thus with this deceit the woman had saved the beloved and threw filth on their faces. The Raja could not think about the good or bad points, and had killed the informer instead. (11)

There was a Raja by the name of Tripur Pal at a place where the town of Tripura existed. He had a beautiful queen by the name of Tripur Mati, who had been moulded out of gold after melting it. (1)

She had a rival queen called Phut Mati and this was like a thorn in her eyes. She was always feeling jealous of her, but would not say anything against her openly. (2)

Tripura Mati was enamoured by a Brahmin with body and mind and would call him at home during day and night and would have sexual relationship with him to her satisfaction. (3)

She called another woman, whom she gave lot of money and trained her (told her) to start crying loudly when all the subjects had gone to sleep. (4)

After saying this, the queen went to sleep with the Raja. When it was dark midnight, then that woman started crying and wailing loudly. The Raja also heard this noise. (5)

The Raja took his sword in hand and went there along with the queen. Both went there and asked her, like this. (6)

I wish somehow the Raja's life should be protected (saved) so we should do something in the morning. Then the woman suggested that you could save the Raja by doing one thing. (9)

(O Raja!) "Tripat Mati may be handed over to the Brahmin and take the planquin on your shoulders and then take her to the Brahmin's house, by giving her lot of money. Then the death will not bother the Raja." (10)

Phool Mati, the second queen, may be given to a devil and then Tripat Mati should not be brought back, and she should not show the face again. (11)

The queen sent a clever handmaid to him, who brought him along with her through some deceit. When the queen advanced her hand towards him, then Haj Rai did not accept her proposal. (6)

The young belle tried her best but failed to win over his love and he did not have any love affair with the queen. Then the queen, being unsuccessful played another trick. She fell down on the ground and started shouting 'Alas', 'Alas' saying that her heart was sinking, being taken away by the evil spirit. (7)

The queen had dressed him in a female robe and hearing the word (name) of a beldame (hag) all the people got up from there. When he was beaten up by catching hold of him, he agreed to (accepted) the proposal of the queen. (8)

In the meantime, the Raja also had reached there. "The woman lover had stolen the heart of the queen, on hearing these words, the Raja got furious with rage and said, "Kill this hag, or she should make the queen alive (should give her heart back)." (9)

Then Hazi Rai made the Raja stand at a distance and he kissed the queen. The Raja felt that by doing so, he was giving the queen back her heart and the fool was not following the secret behind it. (10)

Then he removed all the people from there and had cohabitation with the queen. She said, " O beloved! You have saved my life, so I shall always enjoy sensuous pleasure with you in many ways. (11)

At first she gave back my heart and then she went into meditation trance, "O mighty Raja! Then I did not see her. Who knows where she had gone?" (13)

The Raja then remarked 'True, True', but the fool did not grasp the secret behind it. In the presence of all the people, the paramour carried out cohabitation with her and with this game play, he managed to escape unnoticed. (14)

At first the woman called the paramour, when he did not agree, then he was frightened (and beaten) and then had sexual relationship with him and the Raja, standing there, got himself deceived openly. (15) (1)

She said, "Where should I stay now and whom shall 1 call my beloved. There was no justice in God's domain and had reduced me to such a terrible plight." (9)

She took away all the money and (went) lived with the paramour. The person, whom she used to call co-brother, was kept in the house as her Master by this deceitful action. (10)

All the people were talking like this and thinking about her saying that "What will this poor woman do, who had been reduced to this state by the Lord Almighty." (11)

So she had taken all the money and went to her brother's wife. No one could appreciate the real secret behind it. The woman, having killed the spouse, went to live with the paramour. (12) (1)

When the Shah's daughter heard like this, it seemed that a ray of hope had been kindled in her whole body (life again started percolating her whole body) or a poor person had gained lot of wealth suddenly, or a dying person had been given the nectar of life. (9)

She dressed up like a woman, whom the prince loved and then went to sleep (with those clothes). That handmaid went to the palace, and started talking all sorts of things. (10)

(She said), "O Prince! The woman, who had become your own, I have sent that woman to you. You have enamoured her fully (won her heart) 0 Prince! Now come and show your love to her, as it suits you." (11)

When the prince heard like this, then he rushed out, without even wearing his shoes. He did not grasp the secret and came to the house of the Shah's daughter. (12)

The queen was extremely charming, on seeing her beauty even the sun would feel belittled. The Raja was fully enamoured by her just as the black bee is attached to the lotus-flower petals.(2)

There used to live a Shah's daughter, who happened to glance the Raja's beauty one day. She was called Sukumar Dei and there was no other woman to match her in beauty. (3)

She thought in her mind that since the time she had seen him, her heart was fully attached to him (she had developed love for him). "But how to gain the company of the Raja? And then how to make him forget about his previous wife?" (4)

She removed all her beautiful robes and dressed herself in a Sadhu's robes (as an ascetic) and lit up a fire (with smoke emanating) out side Raja's place (door). No man or woman noticed or thought about it. (5)

After the lapse of few days, the Raja came out of his palace to go round the town and he came out in a Sadhu's guise (like an ascetic) so as to hear the people (talking about him). (6)

(She said), "He goes to the queen daily, who was having a loose character, while the foolish Raja feels that she loved him only, whereas she sleeps with different paramours always." (8)

When the Raja heard these words with his own ears then he went to ask her, "O Sadhu! What should the Raja do? How could he get rid of her, as you have said (about her)?" (9)

The Sadhu then replied, "This type of woman was not worthy of the Raja. The right course (position) would be either to kill her immediately or she should be turned out of his palace. The best course would be not to visit the woman even for a moment, who was involved in such an ill-famed conduct." (10)

"There was another woman, worthy of him, who was supposed to have been born in a Shah's house. Just as this Raja was a king of kings, similarly among women she was a sublime woman." (11)

"If the Raja would bring her home, then his kingdom would be worth all the glory. On seeing her all other women would feel ashamed (belittled), just as the stars disappear on the (rise of the sun) sunrise." (12)

When the Raja heard all this, he made up his mind to get rid of this queen, with loose character and bring the Shah's daughter as his wife. (13)

She was so much engrossed in his love that she completely forgot the love of her spouse. One day she drank red ochre (mixed in water) and in the presence of the Raja vomited it out. (3)

The Raja thought she had vomited blood so he could not bear her suffering and being worried called the Vaid (physician) and gave him the details of her malady. (4)

Then the woman drank red ochre again and all thought it to be a vomit of blood. Then the woman told the spouse that the queen should be considered as almost dead (was almost near death). (5)

The queen told the Raja, "You should act according to what I will suggest. Do not see my face and nor show my face to any handmaid. You should cremate (burn) the queen and then come home." (6)

The Raja took the words of the queen as true. She stopped her breath (breathing) intentionally and it seemed she were dead. Tears came into the Raja's eyes and the queen escaped along with the paramour by taking a chance (at opportune time). (7)

After wiping his eyes, the Raja was looking for her, as to where she had gone, as her body was not there. Then the handmaid said, "The maids told the Raja like this, but the foolish Raja could not follow the secret. (8)

The princess was so much engrossed in his love, just as the clouds burst in Sawan with heavy showers. She fell down on the ground shouting `Pain', 'Pain'. Her mother and father along with the maids came back home. (4)

The handmaid said, "O Mother! You must consider your daughter as a fairy, and the princess was alive in the body of this fairy. You must act according to what I would advise, and do not see her face by removing her shroud (coffin)." (5)

"O Mother & Father! You may feel perturbed but this would help her to attain Salvation. She had said, "You should not feel sorrowful for her, and pardon her sins." (6)

"I had not shown my face to the sun or moon even, so why should anyone see my body now?" It appeared as if she had choked to death. The handmaids then wrapped her in sheets (clothes). (7)

They tied a goat on the bier planks and the parents also did not remove the (cloth) sheet to see her face, as both had remembered her words, They thus burnt the goat at the cremation ground. (8)

Then he brought Nand back (to life) by snatching., him from Varuna and arranged for the meeting of Sandipan with his children and saved the milkmen from the clutches of Davanal and then arranged for many wrestling arenas (miracles) with milkmen on the land of Brij. (5)

Then he (Krishna) uprooted the tusks of the elephant Kuvalia and attacked Chandoor with fists and threw down Kans on the ground by pulling him from the hair and handed over the kingdom to Ugarsain (with canopy fluttering over his head).(6)

Furthermore he destroyed the army of Jarasandh and snatched the conch shell from Sankhasur by killing him and finally he established himself in the town of Dwarka having won over many kings of various lands. (7)

Then he killed Dantbakar and Narkasur and got married to sixteen thousand women. Then he brought the tree called "Parjaat" from the heavens and played his games of love at Bindraban. (8)

He was instrumental in the victory of Pandvas (in Mahabharta) and saved the honour of Daropadi and destroyed the armies of Kaurvas. Thus he managed to save the Saints from any suffering or hardships. (9)

"If all the details (of his activities) were to be depicted, then the Granth would become too voluminous (1 am afraid of it) as such it has been stated briefly. The poets may amend it accordingly, if there is any (mistake) omission or commission. (10)

(She wrote) "My marriage has been fixed with Shishupal and he had already reached here for marrying me. But 1 have been enamoured by the beauty of Madhusudan (Krishna), seeing whose charm even (the) gold feels belittled. Just as the thirst of Chatrik (toad) is not satiated without rain drops, similarly my thirst could be satiated only by the glorious appearance of Ghansham (Krishna). I feel desperate now and have fallen (at your lotus feet) but my heart's pining is not alleviated. 1 am waiting for Krishna but he had not reached so far." (12)

Rukmani had explained the secret of her heart's desire and told him to inform Sri Krishna as such. "When I will come to the temple for the worship of Gori, then 1 would like to see your moon like face only (a glance of your charming face)." (14)

The prince Rukam had made all the preparations for marriage along with all materials and got prepared many types of foods and sweet-meats and was moving around the gathering of women with pride (puffed up). He had no inkling of any deceitful action (game play) being perpetrated to outsmart hint. (16)

So he sent his sister (Rukmani) for the worship of Gori (at the temple) and there Sri Krishna kidnapped her, while the despotic people were watching with awe and shock and were lamenting like this, saying 'Alas!'. (17)

Bhujang Chhand

Sri Krishna was taking her (Rukmani) away on his chariot and all the (Enemy) warriors got furious with rage and launched an attack against him. All the warriors including Jarasindh took up their arms (weapons) in hands and covering their faces with iron(sieves) mesh proceeded for the attack.(18)

Many warriors rode their horses, fixing the saddles over them or with full embellishments moved forward. All of them, comprising Maghols, Dhandol, Bundels, Chandols, Kachhvahe, Rathors, Baghels, Khandels etc. launched the attack. (19)

Then Rukam and Rukmi along with all other brothers, along with a huge force, advanced forward. The arrows were being shot from all the four directions. With the tunes of Maru Raga, the warriors sounded the battle cries.(20)

At some places lyres and conch shells were being played while at places drums were sounded and flutes were playing music. The arrows were being shot in continuous streams just as on doomsday the flames of fire were emanating everywhere. (21)

The fast moving arrows were striking against enemy's arrows which resulted in flashes similar to the glow-worms producing lighting. At places shields and coats of iron werelytn.g., broken and somewhere the vultures were taking away flesh pieces. (22)

Somewhere gloves were lying cut into pieces, somewhere the cut off fingers along with rings, with their pearls missing,were lying. Some hands were lying with daggers or swords while their dead bodies were lying on the ground in the battlefield (having fought in the battle). (23)

Then with wrathfulness the warriors like Chandels moved ahead and came to the battlefield jumping around in groups and they surrounded Sri Krishna from all four sides and it seemed as if a drunken elephant had been surrounded by lancers. (24)

Then Sri Krishna, getting furious with rage, killed many Chandels, Maghels, dandhols, Baghels and Bundels. Then he shot an arrow at Raja of Chanderi, Shishupal and he fell down on the ground and could not hold on to his weapons. (25)

Then Rukami reached there, who fought against Krishna with fury. He shot many arrows in different ways, but finally he got defeated and Krishna was victorious. (27)

Being enraged and increased wrathfulness he fought against Krishna, and one arrow was shot by Shiam (Krishna) and he (Rukami) fell down on the ground and it seemed, he had died. (28)

First his head was shaved off (cut off) with the arrow and then Sri Krishna tied him with his chariot. Considering him as her brother, Rukmani managed to get him released and Shishupal also went back home, being defeated and dishonoured. (29)

Many heads of Chandels were cut off and some returned home with wounded heads. All the Chandels were ashamed of themselves being dishonoured, as they had returned having lost the woman. (30)

When the demons came to know about this secret, they killed him and threw him in the river. After lot of time had elapsed and he did not return home, then Devyani felt greatly aggrieved. (4)

She told her father and got him alive again (through his efforts). The demons, on seeing this were greatly pained. They would kill him every day and Shukaracharya would bring him back to life again every day. (5)

Then they killed him and threw him inside wine and whatever remained was roasted and (given to the Guru to eat. When Deviyani did not see him again, she felt greatly perturbed and she said to her father. (6)

Kach had not returned home by then, so she said. "It seems some demon had eaten him up so, "O dear father! Pray get him revived again to life, thus alleviating my suffering of mind.)" (7)

The Shukaracharya sat in meditation, and found him in his own stomach. He then tore open his stomach by giving him Sanjeevani mantra and took him out. (8)

After taking him out, Shukaracharya was found dead, but Kach, with the help of Sanjeevani mantra made him alive again. Then he cursed the wine like this. So that no one now takes it as a wine (by calling it wine). (9)

Though Deviyani was having her sexual desires aroused. but he did not have any sexual relationship with her. Then Deviyani became very furious with rage, as he had not satisfied her sexual desires. (11)

She cursed him, "I have written that episode in Choupaiee Chhand" O Sinner! You will not remember the Mantra in time and: thus you will not be able to bring back the gods to life. (12)

In the beginning Deviyani, though suffering within, was bringing him back to life, but when he refused to have cohabitation then due to her wrathfulness, she cursed him and then she told her father like this. "This Kach had been sent by the king of gods (Indra)." (13)

"O dear father! You should do as I am telling you and do not make him a partner (an authority) on Sanjeevani. When he will go back after learning the Sanjeevani Mantra then Devraj (Indra) would not come under our control. (14)

So pray bestow a curse on him so that he may not be able to recollect the Mantra at the right time. 0 dear father! Please accept my words. Shukarachaiya did not grasp the secret behind it and gave him a curse, "not to have his mantra as effective." (his mantra may not have any effectiveness). (15)

In the beginning she got Kach brought back to life after death many times, but when he did not have sexual relationship, she slapped a curse on him. No one has understood the mind of a woman so far and her deceitful behaviour. Even the Lord-Creator, who had created this woman had not understood her. (16)

O Rajan! Listen to me, I am going to relate another episode, as I am reminded of it in my mind."There was a Raja named Suchhab Ket ruling on the land of Chhajkarna. (1)

He had a wife by the name of Acharaj Dei. It seemed as if she had been moulded out of molten gold. She had a daughter by the name of Makrachh Mati, who was as beautifill as the moon (had stolen the rays of moon). (2)

When the princess grew up to the marriageable age, she developed love for a Shah's son. She used to enjoy sensuous pleasure with him and would make him happy in many ways. (3)

Somebody leaked this secret to the Raja. Then the Raja shifted her to such a house, where even a bird could not enter, nor even wind could creep in. (4)

The princess felt very much pained in the absence of her beloved, -She shouted for one person out of fifty two warriors. She told him to go and bring back the cot of my beloved. (5)

On hearing the words of the princess, that warrior went and brought back the cot along with the paramour. The princess had sexual relationship with the prince and then sent him back in the same manner. (6)

Couplet

One day the princess's father came to her house. Seeing her bed in a dishevelled shape, he got suspicious in his mind. (7)

Choupaiee

Being worried (disturbed) he came back home and proclaimed with the beat of drum in the town that no one could buy flowers without first being checked (seen)by him. (8)

When the time of sale of flowers came, the Raja went there to see for himself, then a Yogi came there, who paid for five mounds of flowers. (9)

That Yogi bought the flowers and took them away. The Raja chased him and finally both of them reached the thick of a jungle, where there was no third person to be seen. (10)

Then the Yogi opened his tuft of hair and took out a woman from there. He had cohabitation with her in many ways and after satisfying his sexual desires lie went to sleep. (11)

When the Sanyasi (ascetic) had gone to sleep, then the woman opened her tuft of hair and took out a man out of it and she had sensuous pleasure with him to her satisfaction. (12)

The Raja was watching the whole drama and told the Yogi with folded hands, 'Please come to my house tomorrow and have food at my place to your satisfaction." (13)

The next day, the mendicant, wearing saffron coloured robes, went to the Raja's place. He had embellished his body in such a manner that he should appear like a very religious (virtuous) person (from his personality). (14)

With the Sanyasi ahead of him, the Raja came to his daughter's place and placed three trays of food before the Sanyasi and requested him to eat (partake) the food. (15)

Sanyasi then replied, "Why are you making fun of me? I am only one person. how could I have (eat) so much food? (16)

The Raja then said, "One tray was for you and the second one for the person in your tuft of hair. So the Raja, making his tuft loose, took out the woman from there somehow. (17)

The Raja placed the third tray before her and told her -With a laugh, to take out the man from her tuft of hair and give this food to him." (18)

The Raja then managed to take out the person from her tuft and told his daughter, "Keep these three trays before them and said, "Let all the three partake of this food." (19)

When the princes saw her father's difficult task she got surprised. Then she took that food, along with her paramour and the warrior. (20)

She felt terrified in her heart, thinking that the Raja had seen this witchcraft, so what should be done now? She thought of some deceitful action so as to get out of this predicament unscathed. (21)

She called the warrior and decided in consultation with him and made him blind along with her father. She went away along with her paramour. No one could know about this secret. (22)

When all of them had become blind, then the Raja said, "Call some qualified Vaid, who could treat our eyes." (23)

Then the princess herself dressed as a Vaid and treated the father's eyes. When the father was pleased with her, she requested him for the same person to be chosen for her spouse, whom she had loved. (24)

Thus the princess, with this witchcraft gained the person of her choice as her spouse. who was already selected by her (in her heart). The game plays of women are beyond count. Even the Lord-creator was repenting having created them. (25)

They got a son, named Parmud Sai.i and it seemed the god of love (Kamdev) had taken birth a second time. His charm was beyond description. On seeing him all the women, rich or poor, would get enamoured by him. (3)

When that prince grew up into a young man, he became almost a changed person, and there was lot of change from his childhood. His body, rather each limb was full of sexual attraction. (4)

There was a Shah's daughter, who got allured by him on seeing him and she had a great urge to meet him. So she sent her handmaid to the prince. (5)

The handmaid told the prince that the Shah's daughter was enamoured by him on having a glance at him. "O dear friend! Please come to her house and enjoy sensuous pleasure with her in many ways." (6)

He had a wife called Achhra Dei, and she seemed to be moulded out of molten gold. They had a daughter called Apsar Mati and on seeing her ail the gods, humans. snakes and demons were getting enamoured by her. (2)

There was a Shah's son, named Surid Sain, who had no parallel in beauty on the whole Earth (in the world). The princess got enamoured by him and she lost all her sense of proportion (about the body). (3)

The princess sent a clever handmaid to him, and she brought him there in the guise of a woman. When the princess gained the company of that young man, then she had a sexual companionship with him in many ways and then hugged him closely. (4)

She made him completely under her magic spell by giving many poses of sexual relationships and kisses, so that he forgot about going back home. (5)

He was always dressed up as a woman and would do as the princess wished. He would always enjoy sensuous pleasure with her and would give him enjoyment (satisfaction) in all ways. (6)

The father could not see through the secret of this move and thought her to be his daughter's girl friend only. The fool could not gauge the depth of this secret and took her to be a bosom friend of the daughter. (7)

One day, the daughter, in the presence of the father, got engrossed in some game play. She declared (her) him as a man and arranging a Swambar, she made him her husband (in the game only). (8)

Then she sat down in a sorrowful mood and said something (to be heard by the mother and father), "See what have they done to me? They have given me my girl friend as my spouse." (9)

"Now this girl friend has become my spouse. O god! This friend has been playing with me since my childhood. Now if I possess any chastity (truth) then may this girl be transformed into a man!" (10)

(O god!), "If I do possess some morality (truth) she may be transformed into a male. She may become a man and then enjoy sensuous pleasure with me. (11)

On hearing these words, the Raja got surprised. He discussed with his queen, saying what sort of things was the daughter talking? It appears all very strange to us." (12)

There was a Raja Sultan Sain and the Lord had not created another one like him. He had a wife by the name of Sultan Dei. who was very beautiful, virtuous (full of qualities) and having a pure character. (1)

They got a daughter, who was like a flash of fire, called Sultan Koer and was very charming. It seemed as if she had been moulded out of molten gold. (2)

When she became young and her childhood stage was over. Then her body developed into a youthful beauty as if Kamdev (god of love) had sounded its presence in each of her limbs, and the woman became famous in the world. (3)

Hearing about her beauty and charm, the princes would come there from all over the place, thus a crowd would gather at the gates and it became impossible to have a glance at her. The princess liked one of the princes, as if he was having the same charm as Kamdev (god of love). (4)

That prince was approved by the princess, and by sending her handmaid she called him. She had tot of love affair with him, enjoying sensuous pleasure. In the morning a swambar was organized to wed him. (5)

When she got married to the prince, she would not allow him to go back for many years. With increased love, she was having his sexual companionship in many ways. (6)

She had sexual relationship with him excessively, thus finishing his manliness. When the prince became very weak, having no strength then the princess forgot about him totally. (7)

Then she developed love for others and was having cohabitation with them during day and night. The spouse was made into an ounch by finishing his manliness and was enjoying sexual relationship with other men. (8)

She had a paramour named Birch Rai, with whom the princess had developed great love. She was almost bewitched by his attraction so that she became famished due to hunger and thirst (being forgetful about herself). (9)

When the woman enjoyed sensuous pleasure in many poses with him, she became almost madly in love with him, losing all her sense about her own self. (11)

If a man has cohabitation for about two hours with a woman then she gets fully enamoured by him, so if a person continued for about twelve hours then why should not the woman be allured by him? (12)

This paramour had sexual relationship throughout the night, using her in many ways in different poses, along with kisses and caused some wounds with nails even. (13)

He had many poses of cohabitation with cleverness and taking her in his arms he had sexual companionship according to Kok Shastra with kisses and many poses. (14)

They were spending the whole night in their cohabitation, so that the bed would get dishevelled In the morning with sunrise, she would make the bed properly spread out along with her beloved. (16)

They would sleep on the cot embracing each other and would take opium and hemp together. Then they would start their love affair and would practice all the poses given in Kok Shastra. (17)

Being completely drunken with the drugs they would continue sleeping on the cot. As soon as they would wake up, they would have sexual companionship while singing poetry and using vulgar language. (18)

In the meantime her foolish spouse, also separation strisken happened to come there, she killed him with a noose around his neck. (19)

The paramour was hidden in a cellar by her and having killed the spouse, she started crying, and wailing loudly. The Raja along with the subjects came running on hearing, the wails of the daughter. (20)

All the people (rich and poor) along with the Raja saw her dead spouse. Then the Raja asked her. "O dear daughter! What had happened to him and how he came in this state? (how he died)? (21)

The princess answered, "O dear father! Listen to me. I do not know anything about it. If he were suffering from some malady, then I would have told you. He got up suddenly with some problem and a moment before this he was alive, then suddenly he collapsed and died." (22)

"If now I have any chastity and 'f the Vedas have got some truth in their versions, then I will worship Rudra right now and I will make him either alive or I will also immolate myself along, with him." (23)

"You also join me in this courtyard in worshipping Shiva. I will take the corpse inside the room and with my worship will try to make him alive again. (24)

She made the mother and father sit in the courtyard and called all the noblemen and guards also. She took the corpse inside the room, where the paramour was kept hidden. (25)

She closed the door from inside tightly and started having sensuous pleasure with the paramour with great joy. All the people along with the Raja were seated at the gates (courtyard) but no one could grasp the secret behind it. (26)

(They thought), If the princess was really engrossed in Shiva's worship and she was engaged in worshippintt the lotus feet of Shiva, then it will not take long to make her spouse alive again and the dead body would become alive, uttering "Shiva, Shiva". (28)

Outside all the people were thinki..g about this (miracle) while inside the princess was busy enjoying sensuous pleasure with her paramour. By closely hugging each other they were making some sounds inside, then the outsiders thought that she was trying to propitiate Shiva and was making some sounds. (29)

They dug a pit in the (ground) room and buried the dead body, without leaving anything (any sign) out side. Then taking the paramour along with her she came outside saying like this. (30)

When I meditated on Shiva, then Shiva told me, "O daughter! You may ask for your spouse, whatever type comes to your mind at this moment." (31)

Then I said, "If my mind is truly attached to your lotus-feet then pray make my spouse alive. "Then Shiva told mes You must take it as absolute truth, O dear Rajan!" (32)

He stopped at his house and went to meet the Shah. Sukaen Mati, taking a chance stole all his money. (4)

Then she removed all the wealth from the house and set fire to the house then she came crying to the father and told him that the house had got burnt down. (5)

On hearing the girl's words both the Shahs rushed to the site and reached there to take out movable articles from the house. But they found on arrival that everything was reduced to ashes. (6)

Then the daughter said, "O dear father! My heart is feeling the pangs of the loss of this trader and am feeling sorry though 1 am not worried about our own loss. (7)

Then the daughter told the Shah that "What ever was in our fate, had happened now. You need not be disturbed about it. The Lord will automatically give back his loss of wealth due to the fire." (8)

The fool did not see through the secret of her move and went back home, being cheated. He took it to be as per his destiny and could not follow the secret of her witchcraft. (9)

There was a town of Achlavati, where Raja Achal Sairi was ruling and he had a queen by the name of Achal Dei. She was known to be very beautiful in the whole Universe (fourteen regions). (1)

Achal Mati was his second queen and she was more beautiful than the previous queen. The Raja had greater love for this queen and all the people, rich and poor realized this love. (2)

The first queen thought of some game play (witchcraft), so she got hold of another woman and taught her like this and gave her lot of money, which the second queen did not know. (3)

The queen had trained this woman that at midnight when all the people had gone to sleep without a single person being awake. "When you see a lamp being lit on top of the palace, then she should go to the Raja with this message." (4)

"O Rajan? You may consider me as a sort of Maya (wealth) buried on the Earth. I would tell you one thing that by offering the sacrifice of Achla Dei, then you may take me home (the buried wealth)." (5)

When Achhla Dei heard these words, then she called that woman and taught her exactly the opposite thing. You give your word (promise) and instead of my name you mention to the Raja the other queen's name. (6)

The first queen had given her lot of money, but the second queen offered her double the amount. So she lit a lamp at the appointed place and the woman said (on this side) with a loud voice. (7)

"O Rajanl You consider me Maya (wealth), which may be considered as buried by Raja Bikat Ket. By giving the sacrifice of your wife, you may take this wealth (me) out to your home and use it. (8)

When the Raja was sleeping along with his queen, he heard a loud voice at midnight. Keep me (this Maya) in your house and by giving, your wife's sacrifice you may use me." (9)

The queen, who had thought of and initiated this witchcraft, she gave out to the Raja the name of that queen. So the Raja due to his greed for money, offered the sacrifice of that queen only. (10)

The queen named it Kutab Shah and buried him by digging a pit there. Then a grave was built for him, which had no comparison anywhere else. (5)

One day the queen went there herself and offered some sweets there (at the grave). She said, "The kindly Pir had appeared to me in my dream and then fulfilled my desires. (6)

"The Pir woke me up when I was asleep and then himself showed me his grave. When I got my desire fulfilled, then 1 came here and recognized the place. (7)

When the town residents heard about it, then all of them came there for pilgrimage. They were bringing offerings of sweetmeats and they would kiss the grave of the dog. (8)

Some Kazis, Sheikhs and Sayyads would come there and after rendering the last prayers (Fatch) they would distribute (sugar) sweet juice and they would dust the place with their beards (as broom) and would go after kissing the grave of the dog. (9)

So she had got many dishes prepared along with other food material and mixed many types of poison in them. The donkeys were also given lot of opium and placed (tied) them in the zone of the demon. (11)

At midnight the demon came there and gulped the he-buffalos and the donkeys. He had eaten various foods then and took wine in large tumblers. (12)

After consuming wine, he became unconscious and the opium had choked his throat. He went to sleep, losing all his senses. Then taking an opportune moment, the woman came there to kill him. (13)

She took about eight thousand maunds (quintals) of lead and poured on him after melting it, and burnt the demon reducing him to ashes, and brought relief and peace to the town of Birehvati. (14)

Couplet

With this deceitful action, the woman (prostitute) had killed the demon and after wedding the Raja, she lived in comfort, while the subjects also lived happily in the town afterwards. (15)

Here the three hundred and thirtieth episode of King's and Minister's dialogue regarding the woman's witchcraft from Charitar Pakhyan is completed. All is well. (330-6193) (Contd.)

There was a Raja of the land of Valundej. He had a wife named Valundej Dei, and Firang Rai became agitated in his mind against her. So he launched an attack against him, along with a huge army.(1)

The Raja was called Firangi Rai, who had attacked the British even. He took along with him a huge army of multi-coloured types. It seemed as if Ganga waters were in floods. (2)

The spouse of Valundej Dei gave up his life due to the fear only. But the queen did not disclose this secret to anyone else, that the Raja had died out of sheer fear only. (3)

She saw her dead spouse, and then consulted her army men. She made a plan and got made one lakh idols of wood. (4)

She placed one lakh guns in their hands, which were loaded with bullets and gunpowder. This artillery was placed in the entrance of the building and collected many arrows, guns, bows and arrows. (5)

When the enemy forces came near them, then he set fire to all the torches. Twenty thousand guns had fired at once and there was confusion all over. (6)

At midnight, the woman dressed up like a dog, taking a sword in hand and went to the stable, where the horse was kept. (8)

The woman, expert in giving alms or praises and wielding a sword, jumped over the walls of the fort and reached the spot. Whichever guard noticed her being awake was killed by her. (9)

First she killed one guard and then the second one, then the third one, and then killed the fourth guard. After that she killed the fifth, sixth and seventh guard and then killing the eighth guard, let loose (untied) the required horse. (10)

When the woman had taken away the horse, there was lot of hue and cry in the town. The Raja ordered his horsemen to get ready and trace out the horse, where it had gone. You should block all the roads and paths, thus catching hold of the thief, and catch the thief before the morning. (11)

There was a Raja by the name of Hans Sain ruling there and his wife was named Hans Prabha. She was beautiful, having many qualities and charming. That dear woman was known all over the Universe (in all the fourteen regions). (2)

There was a Shah's beautiful daughter, on seeing whom even a dying person would become alive again. When she gained youthful exuberance, then she started moving around with many men. (3)

One day she dressed up like a male and started quarrelling with her husband and was beating him with fists and legs and he was not recognizing her as his wife. (4)

No one could appreciate her secret, as to what was the gameplay of the woman. So what could one say about others? They did not know one another even. (11)

Couplet

No one could realize what the woman was doing and what she wanted. None of them, could follow the secret of the woman's action or one another's views. (12)

Here the three hundred and thirty-third episode of the King's and Minister's dialogue regarding woman's witchcraft from Charitar Pakhyan is completed. All is well. (333-6240) (Contd.)

There was a Shah's daughter named Pingal Dei, and there was no other young beauty like her. On seeing the Raja, that woman became madly in love with him. Hence onwards she did not like to have any food even (she lost her appetite even). (2)

She was fully attached to the Raja's love, now this strange love could not be alleviated. She called a clever handmaid and after verifying her antecedents, she sent her to the capital of the Raja. (3)

She told her to meet the Raja somehow, she was having her sexual desires aroused within her body. She was longing to meet the Raja, but she was not getting a chance to get out. (4)

That woman told the Shah that one Raja was calling and he was writing the rates of various cereals. So the Shah went there on hearing these words. That fool did not appreciate the good or bad points about it. (5)

Then the woman, taking a chance, went out and then going to the Raja, had sexual relationship with him, while that fool was waiting at the gates. He did not realize any good or evil thing. (6)

The woman after enjoying sensuous pleasure with the Raja came back and then called back (her spouse) the Shah. She told him "that in the morning we both will go to the Raja and would do, as the Raja would say." (7)

It seemed as if the Lord-creator had himself moulded such a beautiful and youthful prince and was moulded out of molten gold in a special mould. Even Brahma his creator, felt enamoured by him, on seeing him. (4)

His warrior-like eyes were looking glorious like the deer's eyes, as if a noose was set for hanging someone. The noose of hair around someone's neck would make him feel its effect, as without knowing it how could one realize? (5)

All the poets sing praises of his beauty but they cannot do full justice to it. If any man or woman sees his beauty then he or she loses all sense of proportion. (6)

The birds wagtails, on seeing his beauty, were all praise for while the black bees were also madly in love. Mahadev even, having a glance of him was moving around naked in the jungle. (7)

Aril

For perceiving him only, Brahma had got four faces, while Kartikya (rider of the peacock) had got six faces (for the purpose) and Shiva, with this purpose only, had five faces and Sheshnag with thousand fangs also could not bear the beauty of his form (could not swim the ocean of his beauty). (8)

Whichever woman would perceive his charm, would completely forget about her modesty, glory, wealth or home and all the women were so much enamoured by his beauty, as if a deer, wounded by an arrow, had become unconscious. (9)

This prince had come to serve with the king Allah-ud-din Khilji. The king had a queen (wife) named Phool mati, who had given birth to a princess. (10)

The child was named Roshan Dimagh. She was so beautiful, as if she was the daughter of Kamdev (god of love), and it seemed she had been created out of moon by piercing it, so she was very haughty about it (she was extremely beautiful). (11)

One day Biram Dev came for attending professional singing and dancing session, then the King's daughter got allured by his beauty. That young belle tried her utmost but she could not meet her beloved. (12)

When that princess became overpowered by her sexual desires, then forgetting her modesty, she told her father, "O dear father! Either; you marry me to Biram Dev or bury me in a grave dug up in the house." (13)

When the king replied, "0 dear daughter! Your words are very (nice) pleasant, but first you arrange to convert Biram Dev into a musalman. Then you could get married to him by Muslim rites (Nikah) as you are interested in his love. (14)

The King sent his minister to Biram Dev and gave him the message of the king First you have to be initiated into our religion and then you could marry the king's (of Delhi) daughter. (15)

Biram Dev did not accept his offer and went back to his own land. In the morning when the king learnt about it, he sent his troops (in strength) to catch hold of him. (16)

When Biram Dev learnt about it, then he fought with them. He killed many (enemy) warriors of various types and they could not stand against him. (17)

Then Biram Dev went to the place where Kandhal Vat Raja was ruling the land. There the Raja had a wife named Kandhal Dei, who was very charming, full of qualities and a wise woman. (18)

Aril

Kandhal Dei , on seeing his beauty, fell down on the ground (got allured by him). She thought in her mind that if such a prince could be gained for a moment even, then "O handmaid ! I will sacrifice my fifty births (lives) on him." (19)

That handmaid went to Bikram Dev and requested him like this,"either you have cohabitation with Kandhal Dei or you leave our Land and go elsewhere. (20)

He thought to himself that the king's troops were chasing him and he had no other place for refuge so he sent back this message through the handmaid that "I will not leave that woman's land and I will have sensuous pleasure with the queen." (21)

The queen had cohabitation with the paramour and satisfied herself by alleviating her mental suffering. By that time, the king's message had come, which was read out by the ministers. (22)

He had sent a written message without mentioning anyother thing, saying "Either Biram Dev should be sent back bound in chains, or be prepared to fight against me." (23)

The queen did not send back Biram Dev and sounded the battle drum by wearing her coat of arms. She went to the battlefield armed with horses, elephants, chariots, arrows and other weapons along with coats of mail, without any fear. (24)

The song of death (Maru Rag) was played and the warriors with canopies overhead were in position and arrows, swords, daggers or spears were in action. Somewhere flags were lying torn and elsewhere broken canopies were scattered around, while at places drunken elephants or horses were let loose and moving around unattended. (25)

Somewhere horses and elephants were lying. dead, while at places huge bulky elephants were lying dead. At places warriors with broken coats of iron were lying around, while elsewhere broken shields and swords were scattered around and shining brightly. (26)

"Having been killed, the varriors were lying, around, but how far could I detail them? A new Granth will be required for all these details to be listed. So as required, I have described them briefly. O dear Ones! Listen to me with due attention." (27)

From one side the Khans had attacked, while on the other side many Rajas had joined together to fight it out and a huge army of warriors was in great fury. They fought with great wrathfulness and noneof them tried to flee from the battlefield. For about twelve hours the battle was raging with great fury (swords clashed with swords). (28)

Many musical instruments like conch shells, clarionets, mirdang, muchang, upang etc were playing. At places clarionets, nafiri and drums were sounded, while at other places Jhang, flutes and kettle drums were being sounded. (29)

Many troops (soldiers) were lying, cut into pieces on the ground and had died fighting for the cause of their Master. On this side warriors with coats of iron and canopies overhead were attacking. It seemed as if a juggler had met another juggler. (30)

At places warriors, with raised hands, were rolling around just as Sheikhs (faqirs) being engrossed in music were afraid of going against the religious norms and mighty young warriors were engaged in a great battle. It appeared as if drunken men having consumed hemp (bhang) were lying asleep. (31)

With the shooting of arrows with such a fury how could anyone escape unhurt? Whosoever came forward to fight, was killed. In an area of twenty kilometers (miles) the battle was raging and clusters of dead bodies were scattered all around. (32)

Somewhere betals were playing the flutes and elsewhere, The evil spirits were singing songs of death. Somewhere the fairies were wedding them (taking them to heavens) who were dying while fighting opposing one another. (33)

When the whole army was killed, the woman sent her son. When he got killed, then she sent her second son to the battlefield. (34)

When he also died fighting, then she sent her third son. When he also proceeded to heavens (was killed) then the queen sent her fourth son. (35)

When all the four sons had died fighting then the woman herself went for the battlefield to fight and calling the remaining warriors the battle drums were sounded. (36)

That woman fought with such a fury that the warriors had lost their consciousness (senses). Many dreaded warriors were lying dead and war drums along with gomukh (ran singhe) and Jhanjar drums were sounded. (37)

Whosoever was struck by the queen with her sirohi sword with great strength, his head would be cut off and thrown on the ground and whichever warrior was struck by her arrows was killed instantly. (38)

Many horse riders were killed by picking them one by one and each one was smitten into two pieces. The dust from the battlefield was rising to the sky and the swords were shining like the flash of lightning. (39)

The warriors, cut off with the Sirohi sword were lying dead as if huge trees, O whrere being uprooted. Horses and elephants were also killed in great numbers, which appeared like the Shiva's dance drama (of death). (40)

The queen fought an unparalleled battle, which had never been fought earlier or in future even (would not happen). She also died fighting, being cut into pieces and left the world for heavens. (41)

She was cut into pieces riding on the horse itself, but never deserted the battlefield. Her flesh was eaten away by the ghosts and evil spirits, but she never fled away from the battlefield, by diverting the bridle. (42)

At first she got the four sons killed and then killed many enemies. After killing the queen, they killed Biram Dev. (43)

After killing Biram Dev, his head was cut off and was placed before the king. Then the king sent that head to his daughter. The daughter, after recognizing him, felt greatly distressed. (44)

Couplet

When the princess (King's daughter) saw the head after removing the covering cloth then the Raja's head fell down at the back and even in such a condition, he did not accept a muslim wife. (45)

Choupaiee

Then the king's daughter, being depressed, taking a dagger in hand, struck into her stomach and she said, "The life of my paramour had been taken away by the Muslim faith. So I would be cursed for having (taken) committed such a sinful action. (46)

The mother's words were considered very acceptable to her heart but kept it a close secret, without telling anybody else. When the belle came home at night, then she dressed up like a male and left the place. (4)

After walking a long distance, she reached the town of Bilaswati. On reaching the place, she created an uproar about a gambling game and defeated (high and low) all of them (in the gamble). (5)

When the great gamblers got defeated then all of them made a request to the Raja., that a gambler had come there who had defeated all the gamblers. (6)

When the Raja heard this news, then he decided to gamble himself The Raja said, "Call him here, who had defeated all others (gamblers). (7)

The Raja's attendants, after hearing his words, reached the place where the princess was gambling and winning. They told him (her) that the Raja was calling him and wanted to gamble with you.' (8)

Then the princess went to the Raja and started gambling with him in many ways. The Raja had lost lot of wealth in the gambling, which could be accounted for by Brahma only. (9)

The Raja, after having sensuous pleasure with her, kept her at his place only and told his guards that all her attendants should be turned out of the town immediately and anyone who tried to oppose should be killed. (8)

That princess was completely engrossed in his love and gave him (the Raja) all her wealth (material) brought by her. Thus with this deceitful action she got the spouse of her own choice. No person could gauge the secret of her tricks. (9)

All her attendants were turned out and whosoever took up arms against them were killed. The Raja ofJamla garb was informed that his daughter had been taken away by the Raja of Besehar forcibly and kept back with him. (10)

The Raja of Jamlagarh had no say over the Raja of Besehar, so on hearing this news, The Raja kept quiet (having shaken his head). Thus the princess got married to the Raja by this deceit. All the society was kept aghast (but nothing could be done). (11) (1)

He had a queen named Bibhas Mati who was known for her beauty in all the fourteen regions (in the whole Universe). he had seven beautiful rival wives and all of them were a (mine) source of charming beauty. (2)

A bairagi (recluse) happened to come there, who was very smart, full of qualities and a hermit (recluse) too. He was called Siam Das. The women were glancing at him day and night. (3)

Bibhas Mati was also engrossed in his love and she was enjoying sensuous pleasure with the paramour fully to her full satisfaction. The co-wives were feeling jealous of her and were distressed in their hearts. (4)

One rival wife, Ahdhuj Dei said to the second rival wife, Jhakh Ket Mati and Pohap Mati told Phulmati. Apart from them; there were two other queens named Nagar Dei and Nagan Dei, while the seventh queen, Nirat Mati was known throughout the world. (5)

One day Bibhas Mati had organized a feast and invited all other queens. Then she served them all food mixed with poison and sent all of them to the valley of death (killed all of them). (6)

When all the wives had died by consuming poison, then Bikhas Mati started wailing that she had committed a great sin and had given them poison instead of salt. (7)

Bhup Bhadra was the Raja of the town and he alone was the deserving Raja of the place. Ratan Mati was the wife of the Raja, who was known as most ugly in the whole Universe. (2)

The Raja was not visiting her. Infact, he was afraid of seeing her ugly face. He was staying with his other queens and he never wanted to talk to her even. (3)

The queen was feeling greatly afflicted with this in her mind. She wanted to have loving relationship with the Raja. So the dear queen tried (made) one effort. 'Listen to that. I am relating that episode now." (4)

When she saw the Raja engaged in his worship, she embellished her body nicely. She dressed herself as Maha Rudra and she(applied) rubbed ash on her body. (5)

Where the Raja was worshipping, she stood there (as) in the form of Shiva there. When the Raja saw her in that form, he took her to be Shiva by mind, speech and action,so he fell at her feet (in obeisance). (6)

They developed such a great love, which cannot be expressed by me with details. One could not get separated from the other one and even a moment of separation appeared like ages to them. (5)

After cohabitation, they learnt more details about each other. She had developed great love for the Shah's son. So she said, "I will consider you my true friend, if you take me along with you." (6)

After enjoying sensuous pleasure with her, he went back home. He did exactly what the woman had suggested. He sent many valuable clothes to her (after purchasing). First he showed all these to the Raja. (7)

Then he sent all those clothes to the harem (women's parlour) and had told the princess also accordingly. "Whichever clothes you like, you may take after making payment." (8)

Aril

After seeing all the clothes, the queen showed them to the princess. The princess covered her body with those clothes by wrapping them. Then she went to the paramour's house but the Raja did not mind it. With this deceit the paramour took her away along with him. (9)

She had a daughter named Sorath Dei, who had no other woman parallel to her (in beauty) and the second princess was called Paraj Dei and Brahma had not created another woman like her. (2)

When both the daughters grew up, then it seemed they were like the rays of the sun and moon. They were both so beautiful that even Brahma desired to have them with him. (3)

There was another great Raja called Auj Sain and it seemed Kamdev himself had appeared in his form. He went on a hunting spree, and he killed some Roj, bears and stags. (4)

Then a stag with twelve long horns appeared from somewhere. On noticing him the Raja raced his horse chasing him and went far ..chasing him many kilometers. (5)

For many miles the stag was visible but no attendant could reach in his support. Then he reached the land of Sorath, where the Raja's daughters were having a bath.' (6)

The stag came to that spot and the Raja killed the stag before the very eyes of the princesses. He was hit by an arrow so that he could not move a step and fell down there. (7)

When both the princesses saw that Raja, then both of them thought to themselves (in their minds) that without the father's permission even they would marry him, else we will stab ourselves to death with a dagger. (8)

Then the Raja felt terribly thirsty and went there along with the stag. The Raja gave the antelope to them (princesses) and drank cold water from them. (9)

Both the princesses arranged for enough wine, which had been distilled seven times. They drank the wine along with the handmaids and making them drunk made them asleep. (11)

When they found that all the maic's had become unconscious and all the guards also had gone to sleep, then both arranged for swimming leather bags and with these, they entered the river. (12)

After swimming some distance they reached the place where the Raja was lying asleep. They shook him up with his feet and woke him up and made him ride a goat's leather bag. (13)

After putting the Raja on the leather bag, they moved further (swimming) in the river. After swimming some distance they reached the Raja's land, leaving their own land. (14)

When the handmaid became conscious, they felt surely the princessesf being drunk with wine; both the princesses had been washed away in the river and drowned. (15)

Then she developed great love for him and knowingly would show herself as totally ignorant (of it). She sent her handmaid to him and managed somehow to call him at home. (4)

She got some poppy husk, hemp and opium and addingwater to it, she arranged for pounding the hemp (bhang). Both drank it, seated on a cot and clasping each other enjoyed sensuous pleasure . (5)

Couplet

When, due to the drug, they were feeling sleepy (seeing stars in eyes), both the Raja and the queen were having sexual companionship on the cot. (6)

Choupaiee

With many poses of cohabitation and making the queen happy and satisfied in many ways and being mad in her sexual desires, the Raja made the queen fully allured by him. (7)

Having developed great love for the queen, both of them planned like this. At the time of litting fire for religious purposes of the Pir, they would come and would add hemp to the sweet pudding. (8)

(She said), "When the virtuous people would eat that powdered sweet, then all would become unconscious, and you come at that time through your kindness and take me away, along with my wealth (money)."(9)

When that day of litting religious fire arrived, they made sweet powder by adding hemp (bhang). All the followers were given this (chooran) powder and all the foolish followers were made unconscious and put to sleep. (10)

When all the religious people were drunk, first she took their money and then removed their clothes and both started for their land. Thus she trained the paramour in this teaching move. (11)

In the morning when all the virtuous people woke up, they were looking for their clothes and turbans. They were saying that the Pir was greatly annoyed with them and had shown this magic play. (12)

All the fools were left aghast and due to shame, they were looking downwards (down cast). No one could follow the secret and accepted their fate, as enacted by the Pir. (13)

No one had been able to gauge the depth of woman's mind and before everyone's eyes they were deceived and she played this game play (trick).(14)

Choupaiee

O Rajan! Listen. I am going to say a Kabit (just as) about a woman had played a trick and she deceived all the people during daytime. She showed her clever tricks, just watch them. (1)

There was a town of Iskavati and the Raja there was known as Ishak Sain. He had a queen called Gaj Gah Mati and there was no other princess so beautiful (as she was). (2)

There was another Raja by the name of Randuleh Sain, and there was no other person created by God on the Earth, who could match him. He was a great warrior and was also beautiful and it seemed as if he were an incarnation of Kamdev. (3)

That Raja went on a hunting spree and he killed many bears, roj and stags and came near Iskavati town and was pleased to see the beauty of the town. (4)

Then he thought in his mind, that town of the Raja was so beautiful, then his queen would be extremely beautiful. So we must see her beauty by some means or else one should die here by becoming a mendicant (Sadhu). (5)

He removed his clothes and wore a mendicant's godri (cover). He removed his ornaments and rubbed ash on the body, thus making the whole body of a mendicant and sat in meditation at the gates of the queen. (6)

He spent many years in that posture, but could not have a glance of the queen. After many days he saw the queen's shadow and since the Raja was very shrewed, he could make out all the details. (7)

The queen was standing in a relaxed mood in her palace then her shade was seen in the water. The Raja saw her standing there and followed all her details (of beauty). (8)

When the woman also saw his shade in the water, then she thought in her mind that he appeared to be a prince or an incarnation of Kamdev (god of love). (9)

The queen called a person, who could make a tunnel (under ground) and gave him lot of money secretly. She got a tunnel made from her house to that place, but no one knew about it. (10)

Couplet

She sent a handmaid through that tunnel and she reached there and took the Raja by pulling him with his legs and the Raja could not react at all. (11)

Choupaiee

The handmaid took the Raja to the place, where the queen was waiting for him. The handmaid thus arranged for her to meet the paramour and they both enjoyed sensuous pleasure to their satisfaction. (12)

Both had many kissings and the woman gave many poses of cohabitation. She got the Raja enamoured by her in such a manner just as intelligent men get attracted by hearing some poetry (of their liking) with the ears. (13)

The queen said, "O my friend! Listen to my words. My heart is now attached to you. Since the time, I saw your shade (in water) since then my heart was pinned to you only, being under your spell. (14)

My mind now desires that I should always live with you, without caring for my parents. O beloved! Now let us enact some such witchcraft so that I could keep my modesty even and gain you as my spouse also. (15)

"Since then my eyes were pining for your glance only, when I first saw your shade (in the water) and you are also having sexual desires for me since then." (17)

After seeing me you also lost your patience, and you carved out a tunnel and you sent your handmaid with the message, that she dragged me to your place. O darling! Whatever you had wished for has happened exactly like that. (18)

Both then sat together and had consultations with each other. "The Raja's guard had seen me." The queen sent away the paramour to his place and said, "O Rajan! Your queen wanted to be frozen to death in the snows with some salt." (19)

On hearing this news with their ears, all the people came there in a group and told her, "O dearest queen of the Raja, "Why do you want to give up this life?" (20)

The queen said, "O Raja! Listen to me! I have killed a Brahmin, so I am telling you the truth, that I will melt along with some salt. Whatever money you find at my place, may be buried in the ground." (21)

There used to be a virtuous Raja in the north direction, as we know about it. He was called by the world as kalghi Rai and many lands(countries) accepted his suzerainty (over them). (1)

His queen was named Meet Mati, on seeing whom even the moon felt belittled (ashamed). She had a lady attendant named Lachhmani, who was having a frail body. (2)

That woman was attached to the queen too much, but the foolish queen did not appreciate her gestures. That attendant was getting some money six monthly from the Raja in a secret manner and was conveying even the slightest information (action of queen) to the Raja. (3)

The queen took her to be faithful to her and never thought her to be the Raja's spy. Whatever she would hear was conveyed to the Raja in a written message immediately. (4)

That attendant had two brothers, but nothing could be said about those two (with large teeth). One was dark complexioned and the other was ugly and the eyes were red coloured like the well of wine. (5)

There was bad smell coming from their armpits, so that no one could sit near them. The girl attendant, being her brothers, had lot of affection for them. That-foolish woman could not appreciate the secret. (6)

There was a Jat's wife in that place who was called by the name of Maina. When the attendant would hear about her coming then she would give her something to eat. (7)

That woman thought like this and the foolish maid kept this in her mind. "If your brothers would ask for some money for their requirement, then you may take it from me and send them secretly." (8)

Then the handmaid did accordingly and sent some money through the food. She sent some money for their needs. After taking that money that Jat woman went home. (9)

There was a Raja by the name of Gorpal, who had control over many other lands. He had a wife named Gora Dei and the land was known as Gorawati. (1)

His wife was entangled to the love of a very lowly person, and that foolish woman did not appreciate the good or bad things. One day the Raja came to know about this secret. Due to his fear, the paramour fled to his house. (2)

Gora Dei then played a trick and sent him a written message. She showed herself as a handmaid of the Raja and thus she continued her friendship with him. (3)

She sent a message through a maid where her paramour was staying telling him to hang around there and send yotir reply through someone. (4)

She explained the whole secret to her beloved and rubbed hair remover on his face and cleared all his facial hair. He was not looking like a male but looked more like a woman. (8)

When the beloved dressed up like a woman, then he went to the (Kazi's) court. He said, " that her heart was won over by the Kazi's son (actually daughter). So I would like to take him as my spouse." (9)

The Kazi opened his book and said (after glancing through it). "If someone comes of his own accord, then even Kazi could not say anything against it." (10)

"She had become my son's wife, so 1 shall maintain her. That fool did not appreciate the secret behind it and in the presence of the king, gave his permission (with full sanction with a stamp). (11)

He went home after getting it stamped and came back in the Form of a male. When the court again assembled next day and the great king sat (in attendance) in the assembly. (12)

Where the Kazi and Kotwal both were present, he came in the form of a man, along with the Kazi's daughter and remarked like this in the presence of the king. (13)

The merchant (Shah) of the town was named Ugar Singh. With whom shall we compare his beauty? (it had no parallel). He had a daughter called Ranj humak Dei, which had lent its charm to the moon even (she was like moon). (2)

She was married to Shumbh Karan. The Raja wanted to see her. The Raja tried his best, but she could not be seen (caught). So the Raja was furious. (3)

He said, "Look at the courage of a belle?" For her I had done so much effort and deceit for her sake, but she did not like a Raja in preference to a poor man. The Raja sent many attendants to her. (4)

The attendants went to her after listening to the Raja's words. They surrounded her house and killed her spouse, being enraged. But the woman fled away and could not be caught. (5)

When she saw her ;husband dead, then she thought of a witchcraft. "How to kill the Raja, so as to take the revenge of her spouse?" (6)

She wrote a letter and sent it to the Raja (where he was seated),saying, "O Rajan! If you want to make me your queen, then you should come and wed me to-day. (7)

O Rajan! Listen to another new anecdote No one had seen such a situation nor thought of it before. Where in the East is Radha Nagar, there a Raja named Rukam Sain was ruling. (1)

His wife was named Dalgah Mati and no woman or snake woman (crude) was equal to her in beauty. She had a daughter called Sindhla Dei, who was either a fairy or an equivalent of Padmini in nature. (2)

There was a temple of Bhavani there and it had no other parallel in the land. The Rajas from different lands were coming there and would bow to Gori. (3)

A Raja named Bhujbal Singh came there, who was greater than Bhoj Raj in glory. On seeing his charming beauty, Sindhla Dei got allured by him by mind, speech and action (and became his slave). (4)

She was already married to someone else, so she could not get married to this Raja again. She thought to herself and being too much depressed, she sent a handmaid to him. (5)

And said, "O Rajan! Listen. Now I have been enamoured by you and I have lost all my sense of proportion, if you could come and give me a chance to have your glance (then it would seem that a dead person had come to life being sprinkled with the nectar. (6)

He thought and pondered over the whole affair as how to go there and with some clever move bring out the princess with him. The Raja had lost his hunger and was in a hurry. (8)

Then the Raja sent back the handmaid to the place, where the loving princess was waiting with the message that she should workout some witchcraft and thus you may manage to come to my place. (9)

On hearing this, the woman got a big drum and getting inside it, she got it wrapped in leather. She seated herself in it and with this deceitful action, she reached the paramour's house. (10)

Thus by the beating of this drum, she came out. All the people including her parents other handmaids were watching it all (without knowing) no one could follow the secret behind it. So all of them were cheated. (11)

The majestic beauty of the town was beyond description, such was the capital. There were many palatial palaces from where even one could approach (catch) the stars. (4)

The Raja used to come there for a bath. He would wash away his sins by this bath. There another Raja came for his bath and he was a great youthful warrior. (5)

Bilas Dei saw him with her own eyes and thought to herself with body (mind) speech and action that either she would wed him right now or else she will get drowned in the Ganga (river). (6)

Then she chose a clever and friendly (trustworthy) handmaid and told her mind's reaction. "If you could arrange my meeting with him, then you will be rewarded with money, whatever you would askfor. (7)

Then that handmaid went to his house and bowing to him, gave her message that the princess was enamoured by him fully and she had lost all her senses (for his love). (8)

The Raja got surprised on hearing this and told her, "O clever woman! Let us do something so that Bilas Dei could become my queen." (9)

O Rajan! Listen. I am going to relate another anecdote, which took place in a Raja's place." There was a Raja in the town of "Naar Gay", named Sabal Singh. (1)

His wife was called by the name of Dal Thambhan Dei, who had studied all the black magic and sorcery. A smart Yogi came there and the Creator had not created another one so beautiful. (2)

On perceiving him, the queen got enamoured by him. With body (mind) speech and action she said, "Let me play a witchcraft to-day only, by means of which, I may gain the company of the Yogi." (3)

With her black magic, she managed to have the thundering of clouds without any rainfall and also arranged a shower of embers (burning charcoal). Lot of blood and charred coal (ashes) fell on the ground, on seeing all this, many people got frightened out of fear. (4)

The Raja sent for all the ministers, and told the Brahmins to verify their books (the Raja addressed them) saying, "that all of you should think it over and suggest some ways and means to deal with these hindrances." (5)

By that time the queen called one warrior (out of 52 warriors),and made him to announce a heavenly voice, that "if the Raja were to perform this act, then they could escape (avoid) this obstacle else the Raja would die along with his subjects." (6)

All of them thought it to be a heavenly voice and no one recognized it as the wordings of the warrior. Then that noble soul told them, "O dear ones! Whatever I am saying, listen to it carefully." (7)

"If this Raja were to give away his queen along with money to the Yogi, then only he could escape death, along with his subjects and would then rule the land permanently." (8)

The subjects, on hearing these words, became almost (mad) confounded and brought the Raja there somehow. The Raja handed over his wife alongwith money to the Yogi, but he could not grasp the secret behind it. (9)

That man was called Parchand Singh. He was so beautiful as if he were the crown head (crest) of Kamdev (god of love). The princess called her handmaid and sent her to that man so that she could relate the whole story to the man. (5)

The handmaid delivered her message immediately, just as arrows are shot from the nalki (tube) and the arrow strikes the target straightaway. That handmaid related the whole position of the princess to him, on hearing which the paramour got pleased with mind, speech and action. (6)

She sent a message that under the Raja's palace where the river flows, he should wait for her. She will place the princess in a huge (pot) kettle and flow it down the river, closing all the holes therein. (7)

"1 will tie a musical tambourine on top, and with this trick 1 will arrange your meeting with her. O kindly friend! When you see the tambourine nearing you, then taking out the princess, you could enjoy sensuous pleasure with her." (8)

After giving such a message the handmaid came back to the princess. Then she placed the princess in the huge kettle and made it flow down the river and tying a tambourine she arranged her to reach there. (9)

All the pious persons were unconscious (being madly affected) just as warriors were lying dead in the battlefield. The Princess availed this chance and getting up went away with her beloved. (6)

One of the devout followers opened his eyes (was conscious) and it appeared as if Satan (devil) had struck them all with his legs and put them to sleep. No one could realize the secret behind it and the paramour took (went) away the princess. (7)

When the Raja went to the Jagan Nath temple (for a pilgrimage), he took along with him, his son and the women (wife and daughter). On visiting the Jagan Nath temple, the Raja immediately uttered these words. (3)

"All my earlier sins have been washed away and my life had been a success now (lived a fruitful life). He had a glance of Jagan Nath (idol) and bowing to him touched his feet with his hands. (4)

In the meantime the Raja's daughter also arrived there and she said loudly (so as the father could hear), "Listen! I will sleep here only to-day, and will marry the person, as suggested by Jagan Nath." (5)

When she woke up in the morning (from her sleep) then she told her father, "Jagan Nath had handed me over to the Kashatriya called Sughar Sain." (6)

When the Raja heard these words, then he told the daughter, "I cannot take you back from the person, whom Jagan Nath had handed you over to." (7)

O Rajan! I will now relate an old anecdote, as given by the great Pandits and Munis.There was a Raja, named Mahesar Singh, whom many Rajas were paying tax (in token of his superiority). (1)

There was a town of Mahesaravati, which looked like a second Amravati in glamour One cannot imagine eye-fir about its glory.. Even Alka (Kuber's town or Puri) was no match to it (it was tired seeing it) and was all sacrifice to it. (2)

His daughter was called by the name of Gaj Gamini Dei, and her beauty was comparable to the sun or moon even, in fact her charming personality was beyond description. Even the Raja and his queen were all praise for her glamour (beauty). (3)

She developed love for a person, so that she lost her hunger and sleep. He was called Ghazi Rai and all the women were allured on seeing his charm. (4)

When all other efforts failed, then Ghazi Rai sent for a boat (to be brought), and named it 'Raj Kumari'. All the men and women came to know about it. (5)

Ghazi Rai then seated himself in the boat and by rowing it, he reached the place under the Raja's palace. Reaching there, he said, "If anyone wanted to take this boat, He may take it, else give me some reply." (any reasoning of it). (6)

"I shall take away 'Raj Kumari' (boat) and will sell it somewhere else. If anyone wanted to buy the boat, then he may take it or else bid me farewell." (7)

The foolish Raja did not understand his motive. Day had gone by and the night had fallen. Then the princess sent for a huge (pot) kettle (deg) and sat in it. (8)

The cover was sealed and it was tied to the boat and left the boat only on reaching midway (when it became stormy). When the Raja held his morning assembly session, then the boat fellow sent a messenger to the Raja. (9)

The princess then remarked, "I will kill myself by striking a dagger in my body, else I will cover myself with saffron coloured clothes. Either I shall get married to the Shah's son or else I will consume poison and face death." (16)

The queen was very fond of the daughter. So she did exactly what the daughter wanted. She gave a handmaid to the prince and he took her to be the princess. (17)

The Shah's son was given away the princess (in marriage). The Raja went away with the handmaid, thinking he had been married to the princess. (18) (1)

There was a Kashatriya by the name of Mohkam, and there was no match for him on the whole Earth (in beauty). When the queen saw him, then she called him at home and had sexual relationship with him. (2)

In the meantime, the Raja also came there, where the paramour was having cohabitation with the queen. On seeing her spouse, the woman thought of a witchcraft and broke her necklace and threw it down in the courtyard. (3)

She laughed and told the Raja, "Please (find) trace out my necklace. If any other person would touch the necklace then it will not be worthwhile for me to wear. (4)

That fool looked down and started tracing the necklace and did not see through the secret. The woman came forward and managed the paramour to go out. The fool, facing downwards could not see the paramour. (5)

There was a Raja by the name of Nripbar Singh, who had suzerainty over many other lands. He had a queen named Kilkanchit Dei, on seeing whom the women of the town were feeling jealous. (1)

There existed a town of Nripbar Vati, which seemed like a second heaven on Earth. Its beauty (glamour) was beyond description, even the Raja and queen would not feel satiated by watching its beauty (it was extremely beautiful). (2)

Their daughter was called Chitchamp Mai, and no other woman was equal in beauty to her or had been born in the land. The praises of her charming beauty were beyond description (by anyone). She was a source of glamour and her body was blooming with youthful exuberance. (3)

There was a great prince, who went out on a hunting spree one day and was chasing a deer, but no other attendant could keep up with him and he finally reached that town. (Nripbarvati). (4)

On perceiving the great charm of Atuck Singh (the Raja) the Raja's daughter was greatly impressed and allured. Through a handmaid she managed to call him and then enjoyed sensuous pleasure with him to her satisfaction. (6)

Throughout the twelve hours of the night, without having any fear of the mother or father, she enjoyed his sexual company. Then by getting some poppy husk, hemp and opium, both of them consumed it being seated on a cot. (7)

When both of them got drunk, they both had sexual companionship and enjoyed various poses of cohabitation along with kisses and embraces. (8)

After they got tired and were fully intoxicated, they went to sleep and did not wake up. In the morning the father came there and the handmaid shook them up (woke them up). (9)

Then she sent back the handmaid with a message for the Raja, that the kitchen was made ready for the Brahmin's feast, so the Raja should not enter without having a bath. (10)

Their daughter was named Naabh Mati, who was enamouring all including gods, human beings, snakes and demons. There was a town of Padmavati and before its beauty even Indra Puri would feel belittled (ashamed). (2).

There was another Raja by the name of Bir Karan, who was ruling over the town of Bhadravati. He was blessed with a son named Aithi Singh, on seeing whom even Kamdev (god of love) would feel overjoyed (would offer his sacrifice to him), (3)

That prince went on a hunting expedition and reached the place where the Raja's daughter was having a bath. On seeing her beauty, he was fully allured (was tirelessly watching her). (4)

The princess also got enamoured by him and lost all sense of proportion or about her body. Both of them got attracted towards each other. None of them had any sense about themselves. (5)

When the princess saw that clever man lying on ground, then she kept her hand on his navel and then touched his lotus feet. She did not utter a word and went home. (6)

She slept (rested) for two hours, and the prince also came to his senses (became conscious). He was saying 'Alas' and went home and gave up eating or drinking. (7)

Swaiyya

On one side he did not put the round mark of saffron on forehead and on the other side, the princess did not put vermillion on the parting of hair (on head). The prince lost all sense of fear of anyone and the princess forgot about her modesty. The Raja, on seeing her, left placing the garlands round the neck and the woman got tired by saying Alas, Alas. O beloved! You have given up food (eating and drinking) for her sake, and she had decided to give up her life for your sake. (9)

That friend did not follow the wordings of the prince, or what the prince had told him. All the people were asking him for details, but no one could get at the secret behind it. (12)

He had a Khatri friend, who was already engrossed in love affair. The prince related his story to him and he could follow the whole thing on hearing him. (13)

He thought the woman's name was Nabh Mati, who had touched his navel and the town was Padmavati as she had touched his lotus-feet (pad pankaj). (14)

They both left the place and started off without any third person. The beauty Nabhmati was living in the town of Padmavati. (15)

By finding out, finally they reached the town of Padmavati, where a lady gardener was making garlands, they reached there along with the prince. (16)

They paid one gold coin to the lady gardener and the prince bought a garland from her and attached a letter therein, which should be read by the beloved (taking in hand). (17)

He wrote in the letter, "That you had touched the navel of someone and touched his feet with your hands that individual had come to your town, and wants to have a glance at you.' (18)

When the princess saw the letter, and took it out from the garland, without giving it to anyone. She called the lady gardener by paying lot of money to her and then wrote a letter and sent it through her. (19)

She gave details in the letter, "Where the Shiva's temple was glorifying, I shall come there at midnight. 0 Prince! You also come there and then have sensuous pleasure with me to your satisfaction." (20)

The prince reached there at mid-night, where the princess had reached already. Then they satisfied their sexual desires to their full. (21)

The princess took him to her house, saying it as lady-gardener's daughter. Forgetful of the fear of Raja, they were having sexual relationship day and night. (22)

After many days, her spouse had arrived, who was very ugly, which cannot be depicted. His teeth were like the pig, on seeing which even the elephant's tusks would (run away) feel ashamed. (23)

The prince was dressed up like a woman and the husband of the princess arrived early morning. On seeing this princess (dressed up like a woman) he was allured and tried to have sexual affair with her. (24)

The prince took up a knife and cut off the nose of the Raja's son. On getting his nose cut off, he became desperate and leaving the house went to the jungle. (25)

When that fool, having got his nose cut off, went away, then they went to the Shiva's temple. The prince brought a deer, after killing it. Both of them then ate it up seated there. (26)

Then both of them had cohabitation and the woman had no desire left for further relationship. The prince took her away to his land and sent a handmaid there. (27)

That handmaid then crossed seven entrances and told the Raja, "our daughter and her husband had gone to the place at night where Shiva's temple existed earlier." (28)

There both of them tried to learn the magic spell there, no third person knew about it. But the spell reacted against them and Shiva had become furious and reduced them to ashes. (29)

There was a glorious town of Audhavati and the Raja there was called Bidad Sain. His queen was called Moorahh Mati, who had no parallel in foolishness (no one had seen such a fool). (1)

The subjects became mad and leaving the kingdom went away to other areas, some others made requests to the Raja, "That you are not doing justice to them." (2)

"So make some arrangements so that we may return to our kingdom. Then four women cried and said loudly, "We shall kill the foolish Raja and then come back." (3)

Two women dressed up as men and went to the town, establishing themselves there. Two other women dressed up as yogis, and reached the town. (4)

One woman committed a theft and the other caught hold of her. Two women, in the form of Yogis and planning a game trick, went to the Raja. (5)

The Raja said, "This person should be hanged. "All of you three obey my orders. When they took him for killing, then both the women in the form of Yogis came there. (6)

The Yogis (women in form of Yogis) said, "Do like this. You hang one of us. Here the things of heaven are happening. "No one could understand their deceitful action. (7)

The second woman said, "O hangman! Do not hang him. Rather hang one of the Sadhus (hermits) and leave the thief Scot free." (8)

This news reached the place, where Raja Bidad Sain was seated. He also was illiterate like the other fools of Audh Town. (9)

When he glanced at them, then the Raja laughed and said, "Why do you want to be hanged? Pray tell me the secret behind it." (11)

They replied, "We have committed great sins during our previous births for ages, by being hanged all our sins will be washed away. Then we will go to heaven and the cycle of transmigration will not be applicable to us. (12)

When the Raja heard these words, then he himself got ready for being hanged. All other people were sent away and he himself got hanged. (13)

As soon as the Raja was hanged the Yogis fled away. Where they hid themselves, nobody knew about it. They again dressed up as women and joined the crowd in the town (so no one could make out). (14)

With this deceit, the unjust Raja was killed, the land (town) was reorganized on better footings. The people of Audh Nagar could not realize the secret, that with this witchcraft their Raja had been killed (got rid of). (15)

Rajan! Listen to another anecdote of woman's witchcraft, which was enacted by the queen on the Raja?", There was a noble Raja by the name of Ganpat Singh and his enemies due to his fear, were trembling in their homes. (1)

The Raja's queen was named Chanchal Dei and there was no other woman like her (in beauty) within our knowledge. The Raja would go to the place of other queens but would not show his face to her. (2)

The queen due to this, was feeling greatly pained and had plans in her mind to kill the Raja. Dressed up like another (unknown) woman, she entered the palace of the Raja. (3)

The Raja did not recognize her as his own wife and seeing her charm he felt allured by her. At the nightfall, he called her and embracing her, he had cohabitation with her. (4)

The queen talked to the Raja like this, that his queen was of a bad character; she calls some man in her house and before my very eyes, she clungs to him in her embrace. (5)

She told the story to the Raja in such a manner and produced great fury in her husband's mind. The Raja went rushing to see her, while the woman also had reached her place before hand. (6)

The Raja, hearing his name, got pleased and took him to be Chander Choor. "I had to go to another land for meeing him, and thefellow had come himself to our land, which is very nice." (13)

When the Raja, going to him, asked him, then the woman turned into a Brahmin said, "The person, who holds a blameless person as responsible for a sin, suffers a lot in the valley of death." (14)

"He would be tied to a pillar there and boiling hot (burning) oil is poured on his body, and his flesh is cut with sharp knives and then he is thrown in the depth of hell." (15)

So "O Rajan! Get some cow-dung, and make a funeral pyre with it. If one gets burnt sitting in that pyre, then he does not go to valley of death (Jampuri)." (16)

Couplet

The Raja, on hearing the words of the Brahmin (woman turned Brahmin) got some cakes of cow-dung, and immolated himself by seating himself in it. He could not follow the clever tricks of the woman. (17)

Here the three hundred and sixty-ninth episode of the King's & Minister's dialogue regarding woman's witchcraft from Charitar Pakhyan is completed. All is well. (369-6700) (Contd.)

There was a Raja named Byaghar Ket and the Lord had not created another one like him. There was the town of Byaghar vati also there, which was appreciated by Indra puri also. (1)

His wife was called Abdal Mati and there was neither a human or serpent woman like her. There was a smart Shah's son there, as if he was glorified like Kamdev (like the black bees nest). (2)

Aril

His name was said to be Jastilak Singh, and he was known as beautiful, wealthy and clever person. If any woman would see him for a moment, then she would forget all about her modesty or family traditions. (3)

Choupaiee

One handmaid had seen him and she started talking about him among other friends that there was a person in the town, with whom even the sun or moon were no match (in beauty). (4)

The queen also heard about it and kept it in mind without revealing it to anyone else. As the night fell she called the handmaid who had seen him. (5)

Then the handmaid said, "O queen! You listen to me. His name was Jas Tilak Rai and he was supposed to be the Shah's son. (7)

"If you say so, then I shall arrange his meeting with you, so that your sexual desires could be satiated. On hearing her words, the queen thanked her (bowed to her) and requested her like this." (8)

"If you could arrange my meeting with him then you could take as much money as you desiren Then the handmaid, without any further delay, went to that place and arranged his meeting with the queen. (9)

Couplet

On having gained that man the queen alleviated the poverty of her handmaid. The queen, avoiding the Raja's attention, embraced him closely. (10)

Both were rich and youthful, so having enjoyed sensuous pleasure both got satisfied and overjoyed. Firstly they had sexual urges and secondly they had taken some wine. The whole night was spent in having sexual companionship. (11)

They were hugging each other and having different poses of cohabitation, thus getting satiated. They were kissing each other and making marks with nails even. In these acts, the night was spent and now the day had dawned. (12)

The queen went to the spouse, but was thinking of the paramour only in the mind. "She was wondering when the day would be over, and it would be dark, when the paramour would satisfy my sexual desires." (13)

"If I go to the Raja then this old man would keep me unhappy. By sleeping with him, I would not gain anything, but then I shall go to enjoy sensuous pleasure with the paramour." (14)

"With what witchcraft could I go to the bed of my paramour (gain the company of) and how to hide my signs of nails? I should play such a trick so that I could avoid the company of the Raja." (15)

Going to the Raja, she related this story. "O master. Listen to my words. A he-cat had scratched my breasts with its nails and showed those marks to the Raja." (16)

The Raja was ruling over Kanchan Pur and was known to be very powerful and a warrior. He had gained victory against many enemies. All the seven regions were afraid of his glorious might. (2)

There was a Shah called Prabbakar Sain, on seeing whose beauty, even moon felt belittled (ashamed). When the queen saw him, then she thought in her mind. (3)

"How to gain his company and through which handmaid should 1 call him? (she thought) without having his sexual company I will not go back home and shall have control over him somehow." (4)

There used to be a fairy named Kanak Pinjri, who was under the control of queen Maram Ket. The queen then worshipped one Pir (out of fifty-two)and sent the fairy to that place, who brought the man along with his cot. (5)

When she had cohabitation with him, then they became one soul from two bodies. She stopped loving her spouse and developed love (four times more) with the Shah. (6)

One day the queen told the Raja, "The Shah was my brother in the last life and a Rishi had cursed us as a result we were born here." (7)

"I had gained lot of peace and joy in your house and now the period of Rishi's curse was over. After saying this, she came to her palace and called the Shah along with the fairy." (9)

Choupaiee

The queen explained to the fairy clearly, that she should make some sound from the heaven like "Gone,Gone" which should be heard by the Raja. When the fairy came to realize the secret, the fairy said, "She would do this job accordingly." (10)

The queen along with the Shah wen: to the Raja and said, "0 Rajan! The queen was going to die. After saying this, the queen disappeared and a heavenly voice was heard saying, "Gone,Gone". (11)

She told all others, "I have seen Bhavani's glimpse. Now whatever boon I would bestow on others will happen accordingly and there could be no deviation (change) from my saying." (4)

On hearing her words, all the people started bowing to her in obeisance, and were asking for favours (boons) from her. She became a "mother goddess" to everyone. The Raja also heard about it. (5)

The Raja was told that there was a woman in this town, who was called by the name of Hingla Dei and she was called "The Mother" of the world and all the people, high and low, pay their obeisance to her. (6)

So all the others including Kazi, Maulanas, Jogis, Sanyasis and Brahmins were losing their followers, and her worship was on the increase. (7)

All other impersonators (disguised) were (losing their worshippers and feeling jealous of her and on seeing her (increasing) larger money donations (from followers) they were feeling depressed. They caught hold of her and brought her before the Raja and making fun of her, they said like this. (8)

"Let her show some miracle of hers to us also, else she should not call herself Bhavani (goddess). Then the woman replied, "O Rajan! Listen to my words!" (9)

The king of the city of Bijapur was supposed to be Adil Shah, and his daughter was named Mehtab Mati and there was no other woman to match her beauty. (1)

When the girl grew up, she became a young blonde with large eyes and was very charming. Her youthful exuberance was so prominent, (as if it had been taken out of churning the sun and moon), as if she was shining like; the sun and moon. (2)

There was a Shah's son, who appeared a noble (soul) seen from his appearance and nature. His name was Dhoomarket and his charm was comparable to (god) Indra or the moon. (3)

The begum became attached to him, due to which she lost her appetite and sleep. After seeing him when she went home, she could not like anything else from that moment onwards (she was allured too much by him). (4)

Considering her trustworthy, she (begum) called a handmaid and explained to her the whole secret of her heart and sent her there, Saying, "If you could arrange my meeting with the Shah's son then you will get any amount of money, you would ask for. (5)

The maid went with the speed of wind and within no time, reached the Shah's place. She bowed to the Shah's son and then she seated herself in the shah's house. (6)

She asked, "What was your name and whereabouts and which place you belong to. First tell me all about you and then glorify the bed of the princess." (7)

He replied, "O handmaid! Listen I belong to the land of Madar and people call me Dhoomar Ket. After meeting Rajas of various lands, 1 had come here for business purposes." (8)

First she engaged him in talk and then showed him lot of attractions (greed of materials) of various types. She managed to bring him along with her somehow, where the princess was waiting for him. (9)

The young beauty gave money to the handmaid whatever she had asked for and then hugged the paramour. She sent for wine of many types and both of them drank it, seated on the same bed. (10)

They started taking wine of many types, and started singing lots of songs in low sweet tones. They started having cohabitation in many styles. They were not at all afraid of the Raja's presence.(11)

The young princess could not leave the charming Shah's son, and was hugging him day and night. If she were going on a hunting spree, then she would take him also on the same palanquin. (12)

Seated there, they were enjoying sensuous pleasure, without having any fear of the mother or father. One day the Raja went on a hunting expedition, taking many handmaids with him. (13)

The begum also went for a hunting spree. along with her paramour in the same palanquin. One handmaid had seen him getting into the seat and gave all details to the Raja. (14)

The Raja, on hearing these words, kept it in his mind, but did not disclose it to any woman, when the elephant of the daughter came near, then he called her closer to him. (15)

On hearing the Raja's words the begum got frightened and her proud paramour also was trembling with fear and he said, "The Raja would catch hold of me right now, and would kill me in this jungle itself. (16)

Then the woman told the beloved, "You need not worry or be afraid and you play the same game trick, as I am suggesting to you. She took her elephant underneath a tree and the paramour leapt to the tree, holding it firmly." (17)

She came near the father and killed many bears, Rojh and deer. The Raja kept quiet on seeing her and felt that the maid had given him a false report. (18)

Instead, the Raja killed the handmaid, for having given a false report. The Raja came back home after the hunting game. The princess then took her elephant under the same tree. (19)

Aril

By holding his hand, she made the paramour (come) ride back on the elephant. Then she had cohabitation with the paramour to her full satisfaction. They were having sensuous pleasure by laughing and bugging each other tightly and were feeling that the Raja could not grasp their secret. (20)

Due to this callous attitude of the Raja, the second wife became very furious with rage and thought of enacting a witchcraft. So she placed some thorny plant (bhakhra) in the arms of the chil and thus Tormented him too much. (5)

The child was greatly upset with this suffering and came weeping (crying) to the mother's house. On seeing the son's condition, the mother became sad and called some professional nurses. (6)

With this deceit she gave lot of suffering to the mother and she herself dressed up as a nurse, and then went to the house of the rival wife, but no one could recognize her or see through her secret. (7)

She had a medicine in hand, which she gave to the child's mother first and the queen died immediately on eating this tablet. That clever woman then came back home. (8)

On coming back, she dressed up as a queen and then went to the house of the rival wife. She removed the child's thorn and then brought up that child as her own son. (9)

His name was told by many as Bariaghar Ket and he had the canopy of a Khatri belonging to Raghubans caste. The body of the Shah's son was so charming as if he were an incarnation of the god of love (Kamdev). (4)

That princess then developed love for this man. She sent an intelligent handmaid to him, who came to the house of Shah's son and that woman then explained everything about the princess. (5)

Then she brought him to the place, where the Princess was waiting for him. On seeing him with her own eyes, she embraced him closely and made him seated on her bed. (6)

Then she enjoyed sensuous pleasure with him in many ways and then the princess satiated her sexual desires fully. The princess kept him during day and night at her place and did not disclose her secret to the mother or father. (7)

By that time the father got her married (to someone else) and she forgot about all these things. But she could not live without her beloved and placing him in a box, she took him along with her. (8)

She was having cohabitation with him during day and night. The Raja was lying asleep and he did not get to know the secret. One day, the Raja woke up and the paramour leaving the queen, fled away. (9)

The Raja, getting furious with rage, told the queen "How have you kept the paramour in your house? Either you tell me all the details (about yourself) or be prepared to lose your life soon." (10)

The queen thought in her mind, "that the proud Raja would not leave me. She held the big wooden club in hand, used for pounding hemp and striking the Raja with it killed him instantly. (split his head). (11)

Then the queen called all the subjects and told, "Due to heavy dose of wine, the Raja had become drunk, and was calling his first son." (12)

"By repeating the name of the dead son, he became full of sadness and by striking his head against the walls, he had split his head. (13)

There used to live a Raja named Charitar Sain and he possessed a queen, called Charitar Mati. He lived in the town of Charitravati, which was famous in all the three worlds. (1)

There was a Shah's son called Gopi Rai and there was no other person, equal to him in beauty. Charitar Dei saw him with her own eyes, then she started burning in the fire of her sexual desires. (Kamdev had aroused her desires). (2)

She managed somehow to call him and getting up hugged him with her breast. Then she had sexual relationship with him and in their love affair, the whole night was spent. (3)

They got some poppy husk, hemp and opium and seated on one bed they both consumed it. Then casting away the fear of the parents in their minds, they indulged in cohabitation in many ways. (4)

By that time, her spouse also reached there. The woman made the paramour lie down on the bed and covered his face with her dupata (head cover) and hence it could not be known, whether there was any male or female member there. (5)

The Raja then asked, " Who was sleeping on your bed? "'The woman replied, "O Master! My mother was lying down there. I am telling you stubbornly that I cannot wake her up." (6)

"You may spend two hours or so somewhere else, when she gets up, you may come here again. When she would wake up, then she will be in great fury. On seeing us both together she would keep quiet. (7)

He took the wife's words as perfectly true and without realizing the secret motive, went away. When you see your mother awoke, then you may call me again." (8)

Saying these words, the fool then went away and the queen arranged to get the paramour on her bed. Then she had cohabitation with him in many ways. Then her father came home by then. (9)

She again arranged to make the paramour lie down (asleep) and told the father_like this, "O dear father! This was your wife and was feeling ashamed, thus she was hiding due to her modesty. (10)

On hearing these words, the Raja went home and no one could make out the secret. Then she took out the paramour and seated him on the bed. Then her mother came there by that time. (11)

Then she made the paramour sleep like before and told the mother like this, "O dear mother! Your son-in-law was sleeping here, who was dearer to me than my life even." (12)

O Rajan! Listen to another episode. There was a Raja of Jharkhand land. He was called Kokil Sain and his wife was named Kokila Mati. (1)

There was a Shah's son, named Badli Ram and there was none else in the world to compete with him in beauty. When the queen happened to glance him with her own eyes, then she became under the spell of sexual desires. (2)

She was having cohabitation with him and the foolish woman did not have any shame in her heart. When the Raja came to know about it, he kept it in his mind, without telling anyone else. (3)

At midnight the Raja hid himself under the bed, but the queen did not know about his secret and called the paramour there. (4)

She had cohabitation with him to her satisfaction, then she saw the hidden Raja under the bed, and the queen felt frightened and thought to herself, "O god! What should I do?" (5)

Then she said, "O fool! Listen. You do not understand the thing. You are touching the Raja's wife. You know that the Lord had created my Raja as most beautiful, and no one else could compare with him." (6)

There was a kind hearted Raja called sada singh and he was ruling over the town of Sada Puri in the West. His wife was named Salauk Dei and she was as beautiful as the moon. (1)

There was a wealthy Shah, who had been reduced to a pauper by the Lord. He had a clever wife, who told the Shah like this. (2)

"If the Lord would be kind to us, then I would make you rich again. She changed into a male dress, and opened a shop on the royal-route." (3)

She was giving money on loan to some people and from some she would take money as a banker. She created a big name (good will) for herself, and this was heard (known) by all the rich people. (4)

There was another miserly and virtuous Shah, who possessed lot of wealth. He would not trust either his son, wife or others, and was keeping all the money with himself. (5)

That woman saw the Shah and showing her love for him, called him. She told him "that her wife and son would squander all his wealth and they would not give you even a penny." (6)

She took from him twenty-lakh rupees (2 million rupees) and gave him a receipt for the money. The woman told him to keep this receipt within the armband, without giving out this secret to anyone else. (9)

When the Shah went home after giving money, she dressed up as a woman labourer and moved towards his house. That foolish Shah did not grasp the secret. (10)

She told the Shah, "Give me a piece of bread and in return take the work of a water-carrier from me. So you may spend little amount, but do not think of any secret behind it." (11)

When the woman got a chance, she removed the armband (with receipt). She took out her receipt and put another receipt for hundred rupees only in it and went away. (12)

When the queen saw him, then the woman thought in her mind. "Which trick should be played, so as to gain his company and enjoy the pleasure of his sexual companionship?" (3)

She went and explained the whole affair to Gumani Rai, as told to her by the queen. So she got him to agree somehow and arranged his meeting with the queen. (5)

The queen then enjoyed sensuous pleasure with him in many ways and the whole night was spent in love affair. By that time the Raja also came there. Then the woman played this witchcraft. (6)

She took a sharpened sword and struck it at the head of the paramour and cut off his limbs into pieces and told the Raja like this. (7)

"O Rajan! Come, I will show you a trick and show you a pir of the stature of us. The Raja did not think of the game play, but saw the dead paramour. (8)

"Was there any woman in the world about whom one may not have heard with ears or seen with one's eyes that she would keep the spouse happy and at the same time (undertakes) enjoys sensuous pleasure with the paramour?" (3)

After the lapse of many days, the queen was reminded of the Raja's words. She thought to herself that she should show some witchcraft to her spouse, that with the beat of drum she should enjoy cohabitation with her paramour. (4)

From that day onwards she adopted this measure as her nature only and made it clear to other women also that she would bring water for the Raja carrying on her head (would obey his commands fully as a slave). (5)

The Raja got pleased with her and thought her to be very faithful (to him)..He thought to himself that "the queen was bringing water for him by carrying the pitcher on her head and then makes him drink." (6)

One day the queen woke up the Raja, while he was asleep and took a pitcher in her hand and told him. "O Rajan! When you hear the beat of drum, then you do according to what I say." (7)

The Raja was heavily built and ugly and was not loving his queen. He was always calling the Yogis (ascetics) day and night and wanted to learn some asceticism. (occult powers). (2)

On hearing the talk of ascetics (Yogis) the queen got enraged and decided that she should do something to-day to kill those Yogis. (3)

She thought of giving the kingdom to her paramour, after killing the Raja and Yogis, so that the beloved should become the Raja (with canopy overhead). (4)

When the Raja came home at night, he called the Yogis also. As the Yogis were coming (one by one) the queen killed them all by throwing a noose around their necks, including the Raja himself. (5)

She placed the Raja, after killing him, underneath the cot and threw the two yogis down (the building) she seated the paramour on the throne and told all the subjects like this. (6)

"When the Raja came at night, then he called the two Yogis also. Then a strange snake came out and seeing him the Yogis got pleased. (7)

They killed the snake immediately and put him in the bowl and then pounding it like hemp, they drank it and their body got enlarged. (8)

When they got puffed up, their bodies were like an elephant and after two hours their bodies got burst and they died (got freedom from the cycle of transmigration). (9)

They were now twelve years old, having, given up their previous forms (body). They had gone to heavens, leaving their bodies. (10)

The Raja, seeing all this, was wondering and told me like this, "Come, we will also eat this snake and then proceed to heavens (leaving this body). (11)

Thus, saying this the Raja ate the snake and being frightened I could not stop him from eating it. He had eaten a small quantity, so he did not fly off, but his body became more beautiful. (12)

He had given up his old form (body) and with this novel treatment he took a new form. Now let us burn the body of the Raja (cremate him) and the kingdom be handed over to this man (paramour) (13)

While having sexual companionship, she became fond of the beloved and would not leave him for a moment even. She was giving him wine of different types and then enjoying sensuous pleasure on a decorated bed. (5)

In the meantime her father came there. So due to his fear, she hid him in a big kettle(cauldron)and covered it with a lid, then kept it in a tank but did not allow any water to enter the kettle. (6)

Then she showed the tank to the father and moved him around the tank in a boat. Then she lit many lamps there, as if stars were shining during the night. (7)

Thus she showed such a strange phenomena to the father and sent him back after satisfying him thoroughly. Then she took out the paramour from the kettle and made him seated on the bed and then enjoyed sexual pleasure with him in many ways. (8) (1)

All of them, holding their rosaries, prayed for her making her hear that "your spouse may become handsome." (8)

After accepting their prayers, the woman came back home and after killing the Kazi, buried him there. By declaring the paramour as the Kazi, she took him there, where the Maulanas were reading Koran. (9)

All the subjects were overjoyed on seeing him (the Kazi) and found their book as truthful. They said, "since we had prayed for her, so God had made him handsome now." (10)

So first she killed the Kazi, and then got married to her paramour. No one could grasp the secret and with this deceitful action, she got married to her paramour. (11)

The maid arranged a meeting of the prince with the princess and the princess embraced him and then enjoyed sensuous pleasure with him. She got herself attracted towards the prince and now she could not forget him. So to gain his companionship 'permanently she played this trick. (4)

She sent for a huge gun, wherein there was enough space for a person (human being) to be seated inside. She entered the gun after reciting a magic spell (with the strength) (of mantra) and talked to the paramour like this. (5)

She called her handmaid after bidding farewell to the paramour and told her like this. "That you will fire this gun, so as to arrange for my dispatch to the prince's house." (6)

When the handmaid heard this, she put some gunpowder and set fire to it. The princess was shot like a bullet and due to the power of the mantra (magic spell) the Yama never came nearer (she did not die). (7)

She fell down at the house of the beloved, just as a stone is shot with a catapult. Seeing the paramour, she made him get up. Then wiping her body (with a cloth piece) she hugged him closely. (8)

After saying these words, the prince was bid farewell and in the morning she dressed up like a man and started moving towards the prince's house. No one else knew the secret involved. (11)

The prince kept her as a servant (slave) and gave her a position among his companions. She started looking after the kitchen and making all food preparations for the prince, while no other man or woman was allowed to go inside the kitchen. (12)

One day, she had taken the beloved on a hunting spree and took some wine in the flask. Then by making the flash wet by sprinkling water over the flask, so that water was seen dripping, from it. (13)

All were thinking it contained water and no wise person thought, it contained wine. When they reached the middle of the jungle, then the blonde told the prince. (14)

"O glorious prince! You must be feeling thirsty, so drink this water. The woman gave him a tumbler of wine (supposed to be water) and everyone else thought it to be only water. (15)

The woman took out some roasted sliced meat and told the prince, "Take some jungle fruit. These have been plucked for you, so now you may have many fruits of various tastes." (16)

His wife was known as Alkes Mati and she may be compared with a fairy, Padmini, Usha or Nature in beauty. Or take her as the daughter of the sun, moon, or gods. In fact. such a beautiful woman had not been born earlier nor one could hope in future. (2)

There lived a Khatri by the name of Zulaf Rai, who was known as very handsome, powerful and virtuous. On seeing him, even Kamdev (god of love) would feel belittled (his ego would be shattered about his beauty). Neither before nor hereafter such a charming person would be created. (3)

One day the princess glanced at his charming personality and being enamoured by him, "started planning a witchcraft in her mind, so that she could get married to him by some means. If she could not gain him, then she should (burn) immolate herself." (4)

The handmaid was sent to the friend and she managed to bring the prince somehow (with little difficulty) and arranged his meeting with the princess. The beloved felt happy and contented after meeting her lover. (6)

Both of them had cohabitation in many styles and both the hearts were satiated fully. Being forgetful of the fear of her spouse, the woman had enjoyed his sexual company in many ways. (7)

The woman and man were engaged in their love affair, and were talking to each other some sweet words, and were taking wine of many varieties on the same cot, having sent for it. (8)

They were engaged in sexual relationship by kissing each other and in various poses of love affair.The hero was having cohabitation with excitement while the (woman) heroine, underneath was enjoying his company by clasping him closely. (9)

Both the youthful persons then drank some hemp (bhang) along with some opium (about 100 gms) and then had cohabitation with full force, thus the hero had enamoured the heart of the heroine." (10)

Both were so much attached to each other, so that none of them could (leave) let loose the other person. Taking a proper chance, the woman said, "O beloved! You learn a magic spell from me and then go and enter the waters." (11)

"So long you will be repeating this mantra (cantos), you will remain alive in water. You will be surrounded by water but it will not harm you in anyway. (12)

Then the paramour learnt that magic spell and went inside the river Ganga. The water was surrounding him on all four sides, but without touching him. (13)

With this deceit the woman had sent the paramour into water, and then told the mother and father, "O dear father! 1 will organize a swambar in the morning and will marry some noble man." (14)

The heroine said, " O dear father! You may go now and in the morning churn the waters of Ganga. If any man appears from Ganga, then he will be my spouse." (15)

The Raja was pleased to hear this and the fool did not appreciate the truth or falsehood. He collected the subjects and with the beat of drums he started off for the churning of Ganga early in the morning. (16)

He got a churner made out of large trees and then started churning Ganga. When the waters were churned a bit, then a man came out of waters. (17)

Seeing the great beauty of that man, the princess decided to marry that prince. The fool did not grasp the secret. So with this witchcraft the woman got married to her paramour. (18)

Couplet

The way Vishnu had churned the ocean and then out of that ocean Lachhmi came out and he got married to her, similarly the princess managed to marry her paramour after churning of Ganga. (19) (1)

There was a fort called Sarab Sindh Pur and Raja Sarab Singh was ruling over it with great glamour. He had a son named Dal Thamb, who was quite learned and there was none else to match him in beauty. (1)

He had a brother called Dust Singh, who was considered by all as the second moon. He was both handsome and full of qualities and there was none else so clever. (2)

There lived a Shah's daughter by the name of Suzulaf Dei and there was no godly woman even so beautiful. When she saw the prince, she got engrossed in his love. (3)

She called a friendly handmaid and explaining her all details, she sent her to his house, but the prince would not agree to her proposals (could not be controlled), so she came back and informed the Shah's daughter accordingly. (4)

The Shah's daughter got tired of making many efforts, but the prince did not go to her house. Then she called one Bir (warrior) from the fifty-two courageous men and sent him there. He held the sleeping prince and threw him down from the bed. (5)

Sometime the ghost would catch hold of his leg and at times would throw him down on the bed. He frightened him too much, and thrashed him but did not kill him on account of the fear of, the Shah's daughter. (6)

He would not allow him to sleep throughout the night and frightened the prince too much. Then this news reached the Raja's ears even. The Raja called a person, who could destroy this ghost effect. (7)

When he (destroyer of ghost) would recite one (Mantra) incantation, the warrior would repeat twenty incantations. He would tear off by holding someone or would keep pressed someone under his thighs. (8)

When all those trying to recite various incantations had failed in their efforts, then the warrior (Bir) told them, "If my Guru would come here, then only the prince will have peace of mind." (9)

On hearing these words, the Raja bowed to him and praising the warrior, he said, "Tell me, where was your Guru'?' We should bring him here somehow. (10)

The warrior then named some person and the princess dressed herself in that form (in his disguise). The Bir had told the Raja about her (place) of residence and the princess then reached there. (11)

There used to live a Raja named Prithi Singh and he was (ruling) abiding in the town of Prithi Pur. His wife was known by the name of Lal Mati. On seeing him all the gods. men, women and snake princesses were getting enamoured. (1)

His son was named Medni Singh, on seeing whom the women would get allured by him. The creator had made him extremely handsome. It seemed as if he were an incarnation of (Kamdev) (the god of love). (2)

There was a Shah's daughter by the name of Chapla Dei, who had been moulded out of molten gold by the Lord. When the prince saw her, then he got engrossed in her love (madly in her love). (3)

He called a handmaid and giving her lot of money, he sent her there and said, "When you will bring Chapal Mati along with yourself, then you may demand any amount whatever you liked." (4)

On hearing the words of the prince, the handmaid went there and explained to her in many ways. When the Shah's daughter could not be won over, then the handmaid played this trick. (5)

She said, " There is a new palace erected by your father, let us go and examine fully. Having said this, she made the Shah's daughter to sit in the planquin and the curtains were drawn on all the four sides (covered her). (6)

With this deceit the Shah's daughter was cheated and brought her to the prince's house. When the curtains were removed (raised) then the woman saw the prince. (7)

She was thinking (in her mind) "Here I have neither my mother, father, brother or any other helper and this handmaid had brought me here, thus catching me in a fix. If now the prince could not gain my hand, then he would cut off my ear and nose and disgrace me. (8)

She fell clown on the ground lamenting saying 'Alas' and said, " I have been bitten by a scorpion." It is disgraceful for me that the Lord had brought me in this situation, that I could not meet the prince even." (9)

There was a Raja, known by the name of Suraj Kiran. His town was called Chand Kiran Pur. He had a daughter named Maha Kumari and there was no other woman created by the Lord so beautiful. (1)

There was a Shah's clever son, who was called by the name of Chander Sain and he was very powerful. Maha Kumari saw him and got enamoured by him with mind, speech and action on seeing his charming beauty. (2)

She managed to call him by sending her handmaid and arranged for some poppy husk, hemp and opium. She gave him all these drugs to drink and then making him drunk, hugged him to her breast. (3)

Since she had given him wine, thus making him drunk, and would not separate him from her breast. She was embracing him in many ways and kissing his cheeks, she was ail sacrifice to him. (4)

The paramour was equally allured by her, and could not get separated from her. They, were having cohabitation y hugging each other in many ways. They were kissing and having love allair while enjoying sexual companionship in many poses. (5)

She was so much engrossed in his love that she would not leave him at all. She was enjoying his embraces in many ways. "Then the princess was thinking how to go with him and by what means and for that purpose what should she do?" (6)

She killed one Brahmin intentionally and told the Raja like this.(I have commited a great son, as such) now I will go to Kanshi and place the saw on my head, and after getting myself sawed and changing the body form, I shall go to heavens." (7)

Thc father was trying to stop her (deviate her) but she was adamant. Even the queen was bowing to her, emdracing her feet. With the help of her magic spell (incantation) she placed the saw on her head, but no harm was done to her even with this saw. (8)

She staged such a drama and everyone saw that she had put the saw on her head. Thus she managed to mesmerize them and their eyes were fixed on the scene (of saw over her head) while she herself went away to the paramour's house, and no one could grasp the woman's secret. (9)

Therer used to be a king by the name of Karoon, who was known as very glamorous in the world. He had forty treasures full of wealth, which were beyond count. (1)

In the same town there was a Shah's daughter and she had no parallel in beauty like a (painting) puppet. On seeing the Raja's beauty, she got enamoured by him and sent a handmaid to him. (2)

The woman's name was Basant Kumari, and there was no other woman on par with her (in beauty). She became entangled in the love of Karoon (King) on seeing his charm. She lost all her sense of proportion (about her body). (3)

The handmaid explained the message of the princess to him, but the king did not listen to it, at all. The whole position (situation) was then conveyed by the handmaid to the princess, and the princess became mad with rage. (5)

Then she arranged for an (underground) tunnel to be made from her house which opened up to the Raja's palace and brought all the forty treasures of wealth of the king to her house. (6)

The foolish Raja could not realize how the woman had managed to steal all his money. When he opened his store, he found not a penny was left intact there. (7)

"I have been enamoured on perce'ving your charm and have become mad with my sexual desires. You may call me once at your place and with a sexual companionship satisfy my sexual desires." (5)

"If you are unable to call me at your place then you could come to my place and have cohabitation with me. I am only hoping to meet you." (6)

The Raja did not call the princess at his place, but he himself went to glorify her bed. The woman gave a good reception to the Raja by burning incense and lamps at her place (in his welcome). (7)

She made him seated on a decorated bed and then arranged for some hemp, opium and wine. She told the Raja to take these drugs first and then hand over his male organ to her. (8)

Without getting united with you, by looking at your beauty I will continue burning within myself, all my embellishments of ornaments and my worldly possessions I will sacrifice on vou once for all. Either you embrace me like a paramour once or I shall tear off my breasts even. (14)

O Rajan! Give me your sexual company with love, as I am completely enamoured by your charming beauty. O beautiful Master! ; I have no other place to go. I have become madly in love with you, by perceiving your beauty. I have been allured by you on seeing your charming personality. O proud man! Why are you so dumb and quiet? You are not trying to understand my feelings at all, nor seizing the opportunity as such the youth of both of us is going to waste." (15)

The Shah's daughter expressed all the means of love, whatever was possible, but the Raja was looking all around in great surprise (and shock) and the proud man was completely assuming silence. She was bowing to him holding his feet, lamenting 'Alas' and got tired of singing his praises but he did not listen (budge at all). The fool kept mum all the time, she said many things but he did not agree to any of her requests. (16)

When the Raja did not agree to any of her imploring requests, the Shah's daughter became furious with rage. She made a sign with her eyes, and they held him by his arms. (17)

By holding the Raja, they removed his turban, and then beat his head with shoes seven hundred times. There was no other man to be seen there, who could come to his rescue (help). (18)

Due to loss of his honour, the Raja could not lament even(by saying Alas), so that someone may not recognize him. The Shah's daughter would not leave him alone and was continuing to strike his head with her shoes. (19)

The Raja then felt that this woman would kill him, and none of his attendants had also reached there (for help). Now she will not allow me to go away scot-free and would send me to the valley of death (kill me). (20)

After receiving beating of shoes for about sixteen hundred times, the Raja woke up to his realization (of truth). He thought to himself "that this young girl would kill me and no help would reach me to save me." (21)

Then the Raja said like this, "O woman! 1 did not realize your witchcraft. So now do not beat me with shoes anymore and have sexual relationship with me wherever you desire to have it." (22)

When the Shah's daughter heard these words, she asked the handmaids, with the sign of her eyes, to get away from there. She rushed towards the Raja and taking him in embrace, she enjoyed sensuous pleasure with him. (23)

He took all the drugs like hemp, poppy husk and opium and had her in close companionship in many poses. The Raja kissed her and gave her full satisfaction and proved his manliness by all means. (24)

When the Raja behaved like a man the woman felt greatly pleased and hugged him strongly and started kissing him. (25)

She held him in her clasp and kissed him, mingling, with him in close relationship with her lips kissing his lips and the breast nipples touching his nipples. (26)

She had a cohabitation with the Raja in such a manner as would satisfy her heart's desires. Then she bade farewell to the Raja and took to (moved) some other land. (27)

After having sexual companionship, she bade farewell to the Raja. The clever woman had thus played this trick. The Raja never told any other person about it, and what the woman had done to him, was kept a closely guarded secret. (28)

O Rajan! Listen to another game play, which was enacted by the woman, which also you must know. There was a town of Andavati, where the Raja Rai Singh was ruling the land. (1)

He had a wise wife named Shiv Dei. She was a beautiful, virtuous and a noble woman. The Raja himself was making many witchcrafts, which he would read out to the women. (2)

When Shiva Mati heard like this, she laughed and shook her head. She said, "I will enact such a trick with this Raja and then having sexual pleasure with him, I will make him write about it." (3)

Though the spouse had carried out cohabitation with her in many ways, she would not leave him. She continued clinging to his breast in many styles, and seeing Raja's beauty, she was all sacrifice to him.(5)

After having cohabitation with the Raja, when she came back home, then she talked to her handmaids like this. "This Raja had called me and had cohabitation with me during day time even." (6)

When the mother and father-in-law heard about it, along with all other maids that the Raja had carried out cohabitation with her they all took it to be a 'story' or anecdote." (7)

Then Shiv Dei said, "I was watching your bravery in that, as to your reaction to it and what would you tell me (on hearing it). Will you keep quiet or get furious with rage and quarrel with me?" (8)

Aril

Who is the woman, who would try to attempt this function during daytime? How could a woman go to her paramour's place in the presence of everyone else? (when all are watching) and then after doing this, why should she tell others about it? In fact, she would keep this thing to herself only. (9)

There was known to be a Raja named Sat Sandh, who was supposed to be living during the age of Sat-Yuga. His fame had spread throughout the fourteen regions (the Universe). Then the Raja called Narad Muni to meet him. (1)

He became the leader (Raja) of all the gods and Brahma himself had anointed him and he made all the (group of) gods free from the fear of enemies by killing all the demons and turning them out. (2)

Thus he rulled over the land for many years, when the demon Dhirg Darh was born. He launched an attack with wrathfullness on that Raja, by taking large army over tan thousand soldiers and faced them. (3)

All the Gods heard about it that the demon dhirag Darh had launched an attack.They also took a large force of twenty thousand and faced the enemy. (4)

The gods made the sun as the commander-in-chief of their forces, and gave the control of right flank to the Moon, keeping Kartikya on the left flank, whose power none had been able to destroy earlier. (5)

From the other side, all the gods came with full force and all the demons jointly came forward to oppose them. Many sounds of musical instruments were produced and the warriors were roaring from both the sides. (6)

They sounded the drums loudly and taking wine they became drunk. The Lord had created a horrible battle between thirty thousand troops or invincible type from both the sides. (7)

When the songs of death (Maru Rag) were sounded on the battlefield, the demon Dirag Darh started thundering and sharpened arrows were being shot from both sides. Whosoever was struck by them, they would pierce his body. (8)

When the gods launched an attack, the demons also became furious with rage and many types of musical instruments were being played and the Kashatriyas prompted the horses to proceed towards the battlefield. (9)

From both side countless arrows, scorpion type arrows, spears, and thousands of Bajar were shot. Whosoever was struck with heavy maces, was crushed to pieces along with their chariots. (10)

Whosoever received the shot of arrows, the warriors were dispatched to heavens (killed). It was a dreadful battle being fought among the warriors, while the ghosts, evil spirits or betals were dancing around. (11)

At places, their warriors were falling reeling around on the ground, while at places their cut off limbs were flying around the stream of blood was flowing on seeing which even Baitruni stream was feeling ashemed (the rivulet full of dirty materials) flowing on this side of Yama lok according to Puranas and is two miles wide, which has to be crossed by swimming and offering of cows (in alms is helpful there). (12)

On this side the gods were furious with rage while on the other side the demons were digging in their positions. Being enraged fully they fought till death, and never returned home alive. (13)

Many warriors had died being cut into pieces. They had fallen down fighting and the fairies got wedded to them. The warriors from both sides, destined to death, had been killed. Many warriors had fallen on the ground and never got up to return. (14)

From this side the (leader) Master of the gods, Sat Sandh launched an attack, and from the other side Diragh Darh got furious with rage. The warriors, struck with bajar arrows, and scorpion arrows, had got wounded and were falling down fighting in the battlefield. (15)

Somewhere the evil-spirits and demi-gods were feeling elated, while elsewhere ghosts and goblins were dancing. The god of death was singing songs of death and one would shudder to hear these terrible sound. (16)

Somewhere the demons were gnashing their teeth while many warriors were vomiting blood, being wounded in the battlefield. At places the female jackal was making loud sound while somewhere the ghosts and pisach (imps) ware eating flesh. (17)

When the king of demons created an encirclement called "Kairachyabayuh" (an army encirclement of the shape of Karach Saras), thenthe Master of gods also created a "Sakti bayuh' (in the war fierce battle followed and the mighty warriors started roaring. (18)

Somewhere mighty warriors had died fighting, while at places gods or demons were lying dead on the ground. So many warriors were lying dead in the battlefield, that not a single warrior was left safe on both sides. (19)

If I were to relate this anecdote in sequence, then I am afraid the Granth would become unwieldy. In fact, thirty thousand troops, being enraged, had fought a fierce battle. (20)

The commanders of the forces from both sides had fought against each other and died fighting, while the horse riders had destroyed one another, the charioteers had killed the charioteers, while the elephants had fought amongst themselves. (21)

The infantrymen had fought among themselves, thus the whole army was destroyed from both sides. Those Rajas, who were still alive, started fighting again. (22)

"The leaders of both demons and gods started their battle once again in many ways but I have no strength to depict the whole drama in detail, as I am afraid the Granth would become too voluminous. (23)

Bhujang Prayat Chhand

How far could I describe the battle details as the battle raged fiercely and not a single warrior from both the sides was left alive. Then both leaders, with canopies overhead, got engaged in a duel. It was such a dreadful battle that the Earth started trembling. (24)

Both the Rajas were fighting among themselves, and the dust arose, compared with the smoky dust rising on the doomsday. A spread out land was not visible in the smoky atmosphere, nor the Earth or sky was to be seen. (25)

All the thirty thousand troops died fighting, then both the Rajas became furious with rage and were shooting arrows while gnashing their teeth and were showing off their inner fury. (26)

Choupaiee

They continued fighting day and night for twenty years, but none of the two Rajas faltered from his position, but finally god of death took the toll of both of them (both were killed). Both of them killed one another. (27)

Bhujang Chhand

When the thirty thousand troops of various types were killed, then both the Rajas fought to death with great stubbornness. Then a (flame of) fire was produced out of the horrible battle, and a young girl emanated from this light. (28)

The young girl, originating from that fire, had weapons in her hands and was laughing. Her beautiful form was unique, as before her effulgence (splendour) the sun and moon even were feeling (ashamed) belittled.(29)

When the young belle was roaming around on all four sides, it seemed as if it were a necklace like the snake type!' She could not find any man all around, whom she could consider as her Master (spouse). (30)

Then she thought to herself that she should get wedded to the Lord of the Universe only" so that she could serve Him with full humility so that the (Maha Kaal) Lord-Sublime may get pleased with her. (31)

Then she thought in her mind, with great alertness and wrote many types of magic spells (witchcraft). Then the other goddess Bhavani was very kind to her and explained to her the whole affair (thing) like this. (32)

Bhavani Said, "O daughter! You need not feel distressed (disturbed) in your mind, as the Formless and armed Lord-sublime would get wedded to you. You only meditate on Him to-night and do according to His dictates (act according to His ordains)." (33)

When (Goddess) Bhavani bestowed on her this boon (favour), then the worldly queen got pleased and satisfied. She slept on the Earth after purifying herself at the place, where there was none else. (34)

About mid-night, then the Lord (Master) gave this ordain (verdict), "When the demon called Swas Biraj will get killed, then O beautiful belle! You will wed me." (35)

When she heard this heavenly ordain, and the sun rose with the passage of night, the young girl armed herself with weapons, and taking all others with her, she proceeded to the battlefield. (36)

Couplet

She proceeded towards the land (town) of the enemy. She then surrounded the powerful fort of the demon and sounded the war drums from all the ten directions. (37)

Choupaiee

When the demon heard the sound of drum beats with his own ears then he woke up in great fury. "Who is there, who could dare and launch an attack against me?" (He said), "I had defeated even Rakat Bind (Raket Beej) in the battlefield." (38)

"I had gained victories against Indra, moon and the Sun and had won against Ravan even, who had kidnapped Sita. One day even Shiva had fought against me and he was made to flee, but I never faltered in the battlefield." (39)

That demon after getting dressed up (in battledress with weapons) came to the battlefield and sounded his conch-shell. That time, the Earth had trembled, while the sky was thundering, saying, "which side the Atul Biraj had become furious." (40)

On the other side, the princess Duleh Dei, fully armed and riding a chariot came there and paying obesisance to weapens she started shooting (horrible) tearful arrows in the battlefield." (41)

When these arrows struck the oodies of the demons, they got furious with rage. When, being tired, they would breathe out, then the demons would increase manifold in the battlefield (from their breath). (42)

The young girl then killed them all, and their blood fell on the ground, which again gave rise to countless demons and they started eating the human beings. (43)

When the demons were munching the warriors of the young belle, then Duleh Dei shot some arrows at them. Their blood drops fell on the ground and many demons got generated from the drops and they confronted her. (44)

The young woman then shot some more arrows, and blood streams started flowing and countless demons got created from it, they were fighting, but never retraced even a step back wards. (45)

Bhujan Chhand

When the sound of the demon was coming from all the four sides, then they became furious with rage and took up their maces in hand. Many had shaven heads, 'while some were half shaven and many mighty soldiers with uncut hair were sticking to their positions. (46)

The number of demons got up, but the woman killed the same number and with the stream of arrows, the young warriors were greatly frightened. As some demons would fall on the around an equal number would get up from there, and they would shout "Kill them, Kill them", and would attack. (47)

The young woman, getting enraged had killed many warriors. The number of powerful demons, falling on the ground, would produce an equal number from the blood falling on the ground and bigger sized demons would get produced. (48)

Choupaiee

The bone marrow, falling on the ground, would result in the birth of an equal number of demons. Any number of blood drops, falling on the ground would result in the creation of an equal number of demons. (49)

When the enemy warriors were losing their breath, then from that breath, many more demons were being produced, demons were losing their sputum on the ground and many more demons would get produced. (50)

Those demons, who were giving up lives, would give rise to many demons and many demons were killed by the young woman, so many more were seen all around. (51)

Kalika then meditated (on the Lord), and the Lord appeared before her.The young woman then bowed in obeisance and fell at His feet and then prayed to Him. (52)

She said, "O Lord, Truth Personified! I am your slave, so considering me your own, pray sustain me, without having any consideration of my good or bad points (qualities and disqualifications); and holding my hand maintain my honour." (53)

"O Lord! 1 have sought your refuge. You have held my hand and it is to be honoured. O benevolent Lord! if your devotee gets into some difficulties (distress) then your decorum (tradition) is endangered." (54)

"How far could I beseech you? You are omniscient, knowing all our inner feelings and my one prayer is regarded by you a thousand times, as such you look after us through your normal custom (tradition)". (55)

Hearing these words, the Kaal (Lord) laughed merrily; and took (tied) His sword to His waist for the protection of His saint. He said, "O young woman! Do not worry. I shall kill all the demons, thus alleviating the sufferings (pangs) of my devotees!" (56)

Where there were innumerable demons created the (god of death)Kaal arrived there. He wielded His weapons with His hands,and killed many demons. (57)

With their blood dropping on the ground, many demons, being produced were seen fleeing away, and with their movement, through their breath, more demons were being created, who started fighting in the battlefield. (58)

The (god of death) Kaal killed them in a moment, with blood streams flowing on the ground, which created many more demons, who started fighting with greater vigour and rage. (59)

They were shouting ail around, "Kill them" and with their breath (sounds) many more demons were being created, and with their running movement of air was generating many more demons. (60)

With their wounds, blood was oozing out, elephants and horses were being produced with their breath, many more demons were being created. (61)

Then Kaal (god of death) killed many demons, and they were lying on the ground like pillars. From the bone marrow elephants and horses were being created and from the blood more demons were created. (62)

The demons, getting up, were showering arrows and were shouting with fury, "Kill them", with more creation of demons, the whole area was filled up with them. (63)

Then Kalika destroyed all those demons, and those using weapons with both hands, were mingled with dust. They were shooting arrows many times and from them many more demons were generating in various forms, (64)

Those demons, reduced to pieces, also produced more demons again, who were again joining in the fighting with their weapons. (65)

Then `Kaal' killed many demons and reduced them to bits and pieces. From those bits falling on the ground, more demons were being produced. (66)

All those killed by reducing them into pieces, resulted in creation of more demons. (67)

In the battlefield many elephants were looking glorious and were sprinkling water with the trunks. They were trumpeting, showing their tusks and seeing them the horse riders etc. were falling down on the ground (due to fear). (68)

Somewhere horrible kettle drums were making noise, while at some places the horses were throwing off their warriors from saddles in the battlefield. Many warriors were wielding their spears, and were opposing the Maha Kaal. (69)

Many demons with bajar (arrows) and spears, full of anger were attacking and were taking strikes at the Kaal with fury. It seemed as if moths were rushing towards the lamp. (70)

They were full of ego and pride, and were attacking promptly with full alertness. They were gnashing their teeth between the lips and then attacking the god of death (Kaal). (71)

The drums, mirdang and kettle drums were being sounded, while the kettle drums were producing terrible sounds. In the battlefield various instruments like .fang, muchang, upang, jhalar, taal and clarionets were producing musical sounds. (72)

At places in the battlefield flutes or muraj were being played, while the demons full of pride were thundering. With the beat of drums and wielding swords and daggers they were running around. (73)

The demons, with large teeth of great length, and with greater vigour at heart, were launching their attacks. They were attacking "Maha Kaal" to kill him. It appeared, while trying to kill Him, they were getting killed themselves. (74)

The demons were very furious with rage and were shouting all around, 'Kill them', 'Kill them'. The drums mirdang and kettle drums were being sounded and the enemy with protruded teeth was trying to frighten others. (75)

They wanted to kill Maha Kaal, but the fools could not realize that they wanted to kill Him, who was the creator of this Universe. (76)

The warriors, stroking their arms, and getting furious with rage were attacking Maha Kaal. Billions of demon troops collected there and launched an attack to destroy `Kali'. (77)

The demon forces, in thousands of multi-coloured types with red eyes in anger, advanced and countless soldiers attacked and were blowing off the six regions of earth dust. (78)

Only one region of Eartli Was left safe, while six regions blew off with the hooves of horses.deemed as if the Lord Creator had only created the underground world (Nether lands) along with thirteen skies. (79)

Maha Dev was also shaking in his meditation posture, Brahma being frightened, hid himself in the lotus root and Vishnu seeing the battlefield was terrified and went inside the oceans (due to shame) to hide his honour. (80)

A fierce battle, with great holocast, was raging which was being watched by many gods and demons. It was a horrible battle, the Earth trembled while the sky was also shaking. (81)

On seeing the (fierce) battle Vishnu was trembling, so he dressed himself as a woman and Shiva also got terrified on watching the battle and went to the jungles in the garb ofa Yogi (ascetic). (82)

Kartikeya also became like a stem and Brahma went to hide in the mendicant's post. Since then the mountains have been crushed under feet, and all went northwards to abide there. (83)

The Earth was shaken up and the sky was thundering. The mountains were crushed under the hooves of horses.With the arrows flying around there was total darkness all around, and one could not see one's hand even. (84)

In the battle, scorpion type or bajar type arrows were being shot and the warriors being furious were stretching their bows. They were shooting arrows by taking aim of targets being enraged, which were piercing the shields or coats of arms (protective cover) to the other side. (85)

When countless warriors had gathered in the battlefield, then Maha Kaal became greatly enraged and He also shot) arrows with ruthless anger, and killed many enemy troops in a moment. (86)

Then lot of blood was lost on the Earth, which resulted in creating many more demons and all of them shot one arrow each, resulting in generating many more demons who further launched an attack. (87)

Whosoever came to oppose him, was killed by Maha Kaal, and streams of blood were flowing on the Earth. The number of demons created thereupon is beyond description by me. (88)

The whole Universe (fourteen regions) was shaken up and was filled up with demons. All the gods like Brahma and Vishnu were frightened and moved to take shelter at the feet of Maha Kaal. (89)

All of them, coming there cried out, as if they were looted like a trader and addressing Maha Kaal they said, "O (Maha Kaal) Lord-Sublime! Pray save us! We have sought your refuge and take us out of this fear psychosis. (90)

(O Lord!) "You are the king emperor of the whole Universe. You are the destroyer of all egoistic people and supporter of the helpless ones! (O Lord!) You are ever existent from the beginning free from death and various forms of life devoid of all vices, without any support (Master of Universe)!" (91)

"O Lord! You are flawless, without blemish (free from all maladies) indestructible, the enlightener of spiritual bliss, Formless, ever modern and self-effulgent. You have no mother, father or other relatives." (92)

"You are the destroyer of despots, bestower of bliss and peaceful existence to your saints (devotees), destroyer of demons Rund and Mund, having a truthful pledge, truthful and free from effects of present, past or future ages (Timeless)." (93)

"O God Almighty! You are ever existent as a single entity, but appearing in many forms (countless forms). You have confused (caused fallacies) the whole world and presented your single entity into countless forms." (95)

You are even pervading all forms of life and creator of all living beings (animate or inanimate) and once you remove Your light (soul) from within an individual he is declared dead by all. (96)

"You are the cause and effect of everything happening in the world and omni-scient (knowing our inner feelings). O Lord! You are formless, with enmity to none, and ever distinct (extra ordinary) and having knowledge of our feelings (minds)." (97)

(O Lord!) "You only have created Brahma and Vishnu (gods) along with Maha rudra (Shiva). You alone had created Rishi Kashyap, causing anguish between Diti and Aditi clans." (98)

"O Lord! Having lotus-like eyes, world Creator, benevolent source of all worldly treasures, Master of all, Omni-scient and an ocean of bliss (mercy)? Kind hearted to helpless and benevolent Lord. May you bless us all!" (99)

"O Lord! We are imploring you lying at your lotus feet and you are maintaining your normal system of decorum (tradition) from beginning.May you save us and help us ! the god of death was laughing on hearing their words and blessed us with His benevolence thinking us as His devotees." (100)

The "Maha Kaal" then uttered these words, "Saved! Saved! And alleviated the sufferings of all the gods. He saved His devotees (saints) and fought against their enemies." (101)

"Then the god of death, getting furious with rage, and arming Himself with various weapons, rode on his chariot, with the objective of destroying all the enemies, thus saving the lives of His devotees (saints)." (102)

So the Master of our lives and protector of our glory came to the rescue of His devotees. His banner carried the symbol of 'sword' on it, and seeing this, the enemy would get worried and frightened. (103)

The 'Maha Kaal' (whose banner was having the symbol of sword) being greatly enraged, launched an attack and destroyed the hordes of the enemy troops almost fully. He protected the honour of His saints and destroyed.The enemy forces bit by bit. (104)

He destroyed all the elephants, horses and charioteers crushing them all into bits and pieces. (105)

When a fierce battle was raging, then elephants and horses were being cut into pieces. The vultures and jackals were taking away their meat, while the warriors ran away from the field. (106)

Then Maha Kaal, steadying His weapons, became furious with rage, and a horrible battle ensued. He shot many arrows being enraged, thus striking off the heads of many enemies. (107)

The battle was raging in see-saw manner, while Maha Kaal had dispatched many enemies to the valley of death. The Earth was completely upset with the hooves of horses (striking it), thus the six layers of the Earth were blown off to the sky like dust. (108)

When only one under world (nether-land) was left, the battle was so ferocious that even Maha Kaal was perspiring and he wiped it off and threw it onto the Earth (ground). (109)

When the perspiration from the face of Maha Kaal fell down on the ground, then it took the form of Bhatacharaj and Thadh Sain took the form of a bard and started singing (the praises of Maha Kaal) in Karbha Chhand (the Vaar (song) about -Maha Kaal) (110)

Whosoever was struck by Maha Kaal with his sword, then two men were created out of one and then by striking those two, they would make into four persons. (111)

Maha Kaal then fought vigorously and killed the demons in many ways, then more perspiration of MahaKaal fell on the ground then Boom Sain took form from it. (112)

Then he wielded his sword with loud cries and challenging the enemy, he made a thrust into enemy ranks, which resulted in the formation of many (musicians) bodies. Some people were sounding the drums, pata and taal (dance music) while playing the instruments like chang, muchang and upang. (113)

Many musical instruements lilke Gomukh, Jhanjhar, Tur, drums, mirdang, muchang and kettle drums were being played , while many drums were sounding loudly, and the warriors stretching their bows, were shooting arrows. (114)

The pits were filled with human blood, which further resulted in the creation of many (countless) more demons. They started shouting together "Kill them", which caused many thousands of demons to be produced. (115)

When the (god of death) Kaal would make them fall on the ground, then the blood (stained) dripped Earth would appear glamorous. Then many demons, created from them, would run into the battlefield, while arming themselves with arrows, swords and spears. (116)

They would then, getting furious with rage, oppose them, and they would all be killed by `Kaal, in a moment and their blood falling on Earth, would create a huge demon army. (117)

Then a fierce battle was raging and six layers of Earth were blown off by the hooves of the horses, so from seven skies, thirteen skies were produced and only one layer was left. (118)

Thus Bhatacharj was singing the praises of Maha Kaal and Dhadh Sain was singing Karkha Chhand, resulting in the increase of Kaal's pride, and then killed the enemies, who were using both hands for wielding weapons. (119)

The marrow and meat, falling on the ground would generate into elephants and horse riders or charioteers. Then many horrible demons were produced which 1 am going to describe fully. (120)

Those demons with one eye and foot, and they had two thousand heavy arms. Many were having Five hundred arms with weapons in hands. (121)

Many were having one nostril, one foot, and one arm and were moving around in the sky; some ôf them were having half head shaven or full head shaven. Many were having hair and flying around the sky. (122)

There were some consuming full tanks of wine and after eating human flesh they were living on them. Those demons, drinking ten thousand pots of hemp, were fighting in the battle. (123)

At places flutes or murli were being played and elsewhere upang and mirdang were being played at other places the dundbhi drums, clarionets on the start of battle, were being played. (129)

Muraj, muchang and turhi were being sounded in the battlefield, and at places many kettle drums were making loud noises. The drums loaded on top of the elephants, horses or camels were being sounded, being placed ahead of troops. (130)

Many warriors, being killed had sought His refuge, while many huge bodies of demons had fallen on the ground. While they were giving up theire lives being ahead of others, but their swords were falling from their hands. (131)

Where the battle between Kali and the demons was raging, a stream of blood was flowing there and the hair(of head) were looking like the weeds (on top layer of water), while a horrible stream of blood was flowing. (132)

Many horses were being washed away in the stream (of blood) and not a single warrior escaped without being wounded and the bloodrenched dresses appeared glorious, and it appeared as if they were coming after playing holi (festival of colours) somewhere. (133)

In the battlefield many heads of warriors appeared glamorous like stones where many trees and horses were being washed away (in the stream) while the elephants looked like huge mountains, and looked glorified. (134)

Their fingers appeared like fish and their arms like snakes were looking graceful to the heart (enamouring the hearts). At places the swords were shining (flashing) like crocodiles, while blood was oozing out of wounds elsewhere. (135)

Bhujang Chhand

Where many mighty warriors were killed being surrounded and the ghosts and evil spirits were dancing there being elated. Somewhere else evil spirits, and vultures, were making creaking noise, while at other places loud noises were emanating and somewhere there was lot of hue and cry. (136)

Somewhere, the iron gloves wee lying broken with pearls shining in the smitten fingers, while at other places along with broken helmets, the iron pieces for foreheads , (tikas were also hanging and the warriors lying fallen down on the ground were endearing the hearts (of onlookers). (137)

An equal number of demons were being created by their blood drops falling on the ground in a grand form. They came rushing from the four sides shouting "Kill them", "Kill them". (138)

But all the demons who came forward, were killed by (the god of death) Kaal, thus streams of blood started flowing on the Earth and from that blood many young demons were produced and they were carrying various weapons and shouts of 'Kill them' were heard from all four sides. (139)

If someone were to throw water over water, then it would mingle with it, and no one could distinguish between the two as to which was the original water and which had been added later. (196)

Similarly when all the weapons got merged with Maha Kaal, then the demons became furious with rage. They got frightened at heart and came out with their coats of mail and weapons. (197)

Then the demons, getting enraged were spitting fire from the mouth which gave rise to Pathans with bows and arrows, and they again spat fire which resulted in the creation of Mughals. (198)

Then they got furious and breathed outwards , which resulted in the creation of Sayyads and Sheikhs They all came running to the battlefield by getting armed with weapons and trotting their horses. (199)

The Khans and Pathans, being enraged taking unsheathed swords in hands, launched an attack. They were unable to harm him at all. (200)

Being drunk with wine, many Khans getting furious with rage, advanced further and many countless warriors from Muslims also joined in the attack. I will give their names also. (201)

They were Nahar Khan, Jharajhar Khan,Nihang Khan, Bharang Khan and Jharang Khan, who launched an attack by taking swords in hand or other weapons in the battlefield. (202)

Then great demons like Bairam Khan, Bahadur Khan, Balwand Khan, and Rustam Khan along with a huge army advanced being enraged. (203)

Further more Hasan Khan, Husain Khan, Mohammad Khan, Shamas Mutt and Samsaro Khan, along with huge army, advanced with gnashing of teeth. (204)

On arrival they started shooting arrows and they wanted to kill Maha Kaal who was watching these arrows in action, and would cut them into hundred pieces and throw it down. (205)

Then Maha Kaal shot countless arrows which killed many Pathans and threw them on the ground. (206)

Then Maha Kaal cut Nihang Khan into two pieces and he shot many arrows at Jharajhar Khan, then he killed Bharang Khan in the battlefield before the very eyes of thousands of Sidhas and bards. (207)

Mahar Khan a nd Ghairat khan had been killed, while the head of Balwand Khan was also cut off, Sher khan was cut off from the waist while Bairam Khan was thrown away by holding him from the hair. (208)

Then Bandur Khan was furious with rage, and shot many arrows due to his fury. Maha Kaal also got enraged and shot a stream of arrows. Finally he (Bahadur Khan) fell down, as he could not fight for long. (How long could he fight)? (209)

Thus the Pathan army was wiped out but the Mughal army was still defiant. He had made many warriors to fall down in a moment. It appeared as if Indra (god) had killed many enemies like mountains. (210)

Then the Mughal Bairam Beg was killed while Yusaf Khan had been cut off from the waist. Tahir Beg then stood firm in the battle for some time but fell down after fighting for another two days. (211)

Then getting enraged, he killed Nooram Beg, and then Adil Beg was burnt alive. Thus the Muslim army got frightened and no one could take up his clothes even. (212)

The Pathans had run away and the Mughals also ran away then the Sayyads came from all ten directions and started thundering. Then the depressed Pathans also came back and they started stretching their bows. (213)

Husan Khan, on arrival there started fighting and Hasan Khan got killed while manning the front position. Then Mohammad Khan died fighting. It appeared as if a moth had fallen on the lamp. (214)

Then Sayed Hussain roared with highly enraged condition and Jafla Sayyad could not be dissuaded. Then arrows were shot piercing their iron protective cover and got pierced into their bodies which could not be seen. (215)

Then stretching the bow strongly and becoming furious with rage the arrows were shot by him. The arrows were shot like moths and pierced the body, so that they could not be seen with the eyes. (216)

Thus the Sayyad army had been defeated and killed while the Sheikh's troops, being restless, fled away when Maha Kaal saw them running away, then he did not shoot any arrows on them with anger. (217)

The Sheikh troops, feeling ashamed again started fighting and got ready with their weapons. Just as a hunter of deer, on seeing a lion, falls down with disgust, but cannot kill him. (218)

Sheikh Farid was killed instantly and terrible Sheikh Ujjain was also destroyed. Then Sheikh Amanullah was killed while the army of Sheikh Wali was destroyed completely. (219)

Ja ko ban kaal ka laga. Ta kai pran baaan laai bhaga. (225)

Somewhere the warriors, being cut into pieces, were thrown away while shields and coats of mail got scattered in the battlefield. It was such a fierce battle that the warriors, from the heat generated, could get up again (from fallen position). (220)

Somewhere trunks without heads were moving around, while some warriors were holding grass in the teeth (feeling helpless). They were shouting to Maha Kaal, "Save us", "Save us", and not to kill them. (221)

Somewhere evil-spirits were making noise or the ghosts were making merry. At some places ghosts, pisach and betals were dancing around while fairies were wedding the (killed) warriors. (222)

Some warriors were having one eye or one arm, or one foot or a broken coat of mail. Thus the horrible warriors were killed like this as a strong gust of wind had uprooted the trees. (223)

Whosoever was struck by Kaal with his sword on the head, was left with no will to live (had lost will to fight) whosoever got even a touch of the sword of Kaal, was reduced in a moment to half the size (was terrified badly). (224)

Whosoever got a strike of the Kaal's sword to the slightest (while slipping around),then his head was cut into two pieces. Whosoever was struck by the arrow of `Kaal' (god of death) then his life had been taken away with that arrow. (225)

The drums of death (Maru) were being sounded on both the sides, as if the doomsday had been brought nearer. (doomsday had dawned for them with the Kaal's strike). Thousands of musical instruments like Gomukh, jhanjhar, clarionets, drums, mirdang, muchang were being played. (226)

The battle fought was so fierce that no one could really depict it. Maha Kaal had killed all those Mughals in a moment, who had been created by the demons. (227)

The demons had become furious with rage and they had created many more new demons, and they included many mighty demons like Dhooli Karan, Kaisi and Ghor Dhar, and Surneta Lochan. (228)

The demons like Gardhab Ket, Mahakh Dhuj, and Aroon Netar had been created in the battlefield. On seeing these demons being created, Maha Kaal had created havoc for the enemy ranks. (229)

Asidhuj was very furious and killed almost all of the troops of demons in the battlefield, and cut them into pieces by using various weapons. (230)

When Asidhuj had destroyed the demon forces like this, then the demons started trembling in their hearts, and countless new demons got created. Now I am listing their names without any delay (without taking breath). (231)

Then many mighty demons like Geedh Dhuj, Kok Dhuj, Ulu Ket came to oppose Asidhuj and were shouting 'Kill them in all the four directions. (232)

They started shooting arrows in a continuous stream being furious with rage like the rain on mountains. In no time many horrible warriors were cut into pieces with the weapons used by him. (233)

And Then Asidhuj uttered word "hoang" which resulted in the birth of all maladies(of mind and body) which I am going to list, just as chilliness fever tuberculosis, typhoid, and (Sonepaat) sleep-walking etc. (234)

Then wind, prickly heat, cough (diseases) developed along with many other allied problems, which I am going to detail, which will please all the Vaids. (235)

These diseases are : general diseases, ear-disease, half-head ache, heart diseases, breathing problem, tooth-ache, or molar pain. (236)

Then cramps (rickets), alternate clay fever, fever for four days, for eight or twenty days or one and half months which would attack or the demons with a strong effect. (237)

Then elephantiasis and knee pain, etc. were developed to cause afflictions to the enemy hordes. Then Tuberclosis (TB) flatulence, piles, jaundice, cold, or waist-pain (were other maladies). (238)

The demons started suffering from various diseases like cramps, gonorrhea, Aual fistula, urinary problems, kidney stone, venereal diseases, night blindness or leprosy (which resulted in many deaths). (239)

Many enemies died of colic pain, or due to intestinal diseases and many were suffering from disorder of bowels and never gained life (died of). (240)

Many died of small pox, while some died of flatulence or heatstroke. Many demons died of heart diseases or liver diseases. (241)

When Asidhuj made such diseases rampant then many demons died of fear only. Whosoever was afflicted with some disease, he gave up hope of life. (242)

Many despots were down with fever, while some others died of liver problems. Some were suffering from shivering and many had excessive wind or heat within the body. (243)

Many died of stomach diseases, or suffered from high fever, many suffered from sleep walking, or wind, heat and cough problems. (244)

Many died of head-aches or suffered from wind diseases (resulting in weakness). Many died of tuberculosis, or breathing problems. (245)

Many died of molar pain, or became deaf due to wind problems and whosoever got afflicted by some disease was put to rest by death. (246)

Choupaiee

How far could I describe these details, as I am afraid this would make the Granth very voluminous. Thus the demons were all destroyed. Maha Kaal had played such a miracle (wonder). (247)

When the demons were killed in this manner, then Asidhuj (Maha Kaal) thought to himself that if they were keen to fight again then only they will play some tricks. (248)

Then Maha Kaal blessed them with this boon that many medicines (drugs) will be produced from you. Whosoever will suffer from some disease, then he will be made alive (all right) with those medicines. (249)

When Maha Kaal had given this boon, then many drugs were made from them (those dead demons), as they were full of many qualities. (250)

When a demon was suffering from rashes, he would take some anti-allergy drug and the demon suffering from wind problem, would take some suitable drug. (251)

If someone was suffering from cough, he would take a drug like cuff cure so the demons got cured from various maladies. So they, getting rid of diseases, again started fighting. (252)

The demons then used Agni-weapon (fire-weapon), which killed many human beings. Then Kaal used the Varun weapon, which reduced completely the effect of fire weapons. (253)

The demons then used pavan astar (air-weapon) which blew up many human beings. Then Kaal used mountain-weapon, thus saving the lives of his companions. (254)

Then the demons used megh astar (weapon) which drenched all men, then Kaal used wind-astar, which blew up all the clouds. (255)

The demons then used devil- weapon, which created many demons. Then Kaal used the godly-weapon, which killed most of the demon army. (256)

The demons used the demi-god weapon, and Kaal used the gandharb astar which resulted in both fighting it out and fell down being cut into pieces. (257)

When the demons released (shot) Charan astar' then many bards were produced who stood fast, then Asidhuj (Maha Kaal) shot a Sidh Astar' which destroyed the enemy in great strength. (258)

Then the demons shot an `Urg Astar', which resulted in the creation of many snakes, then Kaal shot another weapon called `Khagpat Astar', which devoured the snakes instantly. (259)

Then the demons shot a 'Scorpion Weapon', which produced many scorpions. Then Asidhuj (Maha Kaal) released another, weapon `Lastika Astar' which removed the sting out of the scorpions. (260)

The demons shot many weapons (astar Shastar) like this but these could not pose any threat (effect) to Maha Kaal: Many weapons were met with some other weapons from Maha Kaal, and whosoever was struck by them was killed. (got mingled with death). (261)

When the demons saw such weapons in this state, they were lamenting with cries of Alas, Alas), and the great fools again started fighting against Maha Kaal (Asidhuj). (262)

Thus a fierce and terrible battle raged which was witnessed by the women folk of gods and demons both. They were all praising `Asidhuj' and seeing the plight of demons, they kept quiet. (263)

Bhujang Chhand

Getting enraged, the stubborn warriors started roaring again and horrible music was played from both sides. Small drums conch shells and kettle drums were sounded thus, as if it were heralding a doomsday. (264)

The conch shells and drums of demons were producing such notes (sounds) as could explain the state of mind of the demons, while young handsome warriors were playing the music which could explain the fury of their mind. (265)

Many warriors, had been pushed back with the shooting of `Bajar' arrows, their blood stained clothes were indicating as if they had played holi (festival of colours). Many enemy troops suffered colic pain and had died. It appeared as if drunken men had gone to sleep after consuming thorn apple (dhatura). (266)

Many warriors in smitten (cut of) pieses, were lying scattered in the battlefield just as drunken men were lying asleep, having consumed (bhang) hemp . With cut off limbs they were wrapped up in clothes, as if after Friday prayers the beggars (hermits) were lying with their limbs spread out. (267)

Then the evil-spirits and vultures were making shrieking noise, somewhere loud sounds or shrieks were being heard, while at places horses were reeling down on the ground as if Kazis were bending while offering their prayers (namaz). (268)

Many obstinate warriors, with iron gloves covering their fingers or stubborn warriors had moved forward being furious with rage. At places shields and coats of mail were lying broken or somewhere the vultures were taking away flesh pieces. (269)

At places, warriors, horses or drum beaters were lying on the ground, or soldiers in cut off pieces were lying elsewhere. It appeared as if mountains broken with Bajar arrows of Indra were lying around. (270)

Swaiyva

When Maha Kaal roared with a sword in hand, then both the gods and demons got frightened. Then Asi Ket (Maha Kaal) with a shining bow in hand, appeared in great fury like a doomsday sight. All the faces became pale with fear, with choked throats (dried sputum in mouth) and millions of warriors fled away as if the clouds in monsoon, had disappeared on hearing the whistling sound of winds in great fear. At places the evil spirits were sucking blood, or somewhere else the ghosts and mythological horses (with human head) were making merry. Somewhere drums were being sounded with a loud note, or at places ghosts and Bhairavas were shouting loudly. Somewhere conch shells, mirdang, upang were making sounds (noise) or elsewhere the horrible sound of kettle drums was being heard. At places, the warriors had suddenly attacked and were causing wounds to the enemy with their weapons in great wrathfulness. (272)

Such a fierce battle was raging, that the enemy forces, furious with rage, were attacking the enemy with their spears, arrows, bows, swords, maces and tridents etc and were bearing the burnt of arrows without retracing backwards. Their body limbs in cut off condition were being thrown around in the battlefield, but they would not show off their plight. (273)

The demons, using weapons with both the hands, with gnashing their teeth, were launching an attack, and were shooting bajar arrows, scorpions or other arrows. They were dying being cut into pieces, but were not retracing their steps slightly even and were being wedded by fairies immediately. (274)

The warriors, pressing (munching) their lips and filled with fury were falling on the ground, being cut into pieces, but were not retracing their steps backwards even slightly. The warriors were coming forward in the battlefield and fighting to death reeling around and were proceeding to heavens with ease and full satisfaction. (275)

Swaiyya

With great fury, the demons took out their swords and rushed towards the battlefield. Challenging the enemy with weapons in hands, they advanced towards the battle front and would not retrace their steps even a bit. They were very stubborn and being fearless they were shouting 'kill them', just like the thundering of clouds. It appeared as if in the month of Savan, the arrows were being showered like the rain drops falling from the clouds (in the monsoon period). (276)

Dhool and Jatayu etc. like warriors had attacked with weapons. Those stubborn warriors, with increased fury, took up their arrows and swords. From all four sides, mighty warriors were frowning and launched an attack and fought with Kharga Dhuj (Maha Kaal) but did not retrace even a step backwards from the battlefield. (277)

As Kaal became furious with rage. He killed the enemy forces in no time, and he managed to save the virtuous ones with his protective hand and killed countless enemies in a moment. (279)

When MahaKaal (Asidhuj) got enraged in the battlefield, then he picked up the enemies one by one and killed them. All the devotees were saved, as he attacked the whole lot of his enemies. (280)

When Kaal had killed the demons,then horrible demons were falling on the ground. He protected his saints with his own hands while killed most of the foes in a moment. (281)

Countless demons came attacking, being furious with rage, and were shouting from all ten sides "kill them, kill them". Kaal again took up his sword, getting wrathful launched an attack on the enemy forces in a moment. (282)

The enemy again wanted to kill Maha Kaal with the help of many demons. Just as someone shoots an arrow at the sky which does not strike it, but comes back to strike the one, who shoots it. (283)

The demons were playing many musical instruments and then came near Maha Kaal. Maha Kaal then performed his moral duty to save his devotees by killing the despots (enemies). (284)

He (Maha Kaal) killed all the demons by cutting them into pieces and reduced them into bits and pieced Kaal then again shot the Agni Astar' (Fire weapon) and completely destroyed the whole demon army. (285)

The demons then fired the Varuna Astar, which turned back the Agni Astar. Then Kaal released the `Basav Astar' and Indra appeared in person to fight it out. (286)

Then the demon, seeing Indra standing in the field, drank two wells of wine (too much wine). Then by getting furious with rage thundered in such a manner, that on hearing the note the Earth and sky both started trembling. (287)

The demon shot many arrows against Indra, which pierced the shields and coats of mail (protevtive cover) onto the other side. It appeared as if the snakes had entered their holes, and piercing the Earth , they had gone to the underworld(nether Land). (288)

Then Indra felt great anguish and took the arrow and bow in hand, and shot many arrows with great fury, which pierced the bodies of demons, thrcugh to the other side. (289)

The demon then launched another attack with fury and made the idol-worshipper to run away from the battlefield. When Maha Kaal saw the gods fleeing from the battlefield, then he released (shot) all the weapons and arms in the battlefield. (290)

Then Kaal showered the arrows, which on striking the enemy burnt the whole demon army and many enemies died (of burning), then many demons got up and started fighting. (291)

Then Kaal, being furious with rage, shot the arrows, which pierced the demons through to the other side. Then the demons getting wrathful, started fighting against Maha Kaal. (292)

Then Maha Kaal shot many arrows and killed the demons one by one; then many more demons got created in the battlefield and were facing Maha Kaal squarely. (293)

Whichever demons came to oppose Maha Kaal, were killed by him. The charioteers and elephants riders were cut into pieces. Then many more demons were generated and faced the enemy, along with many charioteers, elephants and horse riders. (294)

Then Kaal launched the attack in great wrathfulness, which sent many demons to the valley of death. Then Maha Kaal took up his bow, and with one arrow only, he killed hundred or more. (295)

One arrow was shot at one hundred demons, wbich resulted in a blood stream flowing down there, which resulted in the creation of hundred of demons, who started opposing. They were armed with swords, riders of elephants arid having coats of mail and got dug in there. (296)

Then Maha Kaal, 'taking a thousand forms, was thundering with great strength, and he laughed with a horrible sound and was spitting fire with protruding teeth. (297)

He (Maha Kaai) shot one arrow each time, killing one thousand demons every time, while many demons were crushed under his molar teeth and many more warriors were crushed under his feet. (298)

Many warriors were just devoured by holding them so that no more demons could be produced. Many of them were just pulled to death by dragging them with his eyes (glance) thus their blood was sucked in. (299)

When the demons were divested of their blood, then more demons could not be created, and they were dying by getting exhausted, so that no more demons could be produced. (300)

Then Kaal sucked in the wind, so that their could be no increase in the number of demons. Thus with such a type of attack, the strength of the demons was also reduced. (301)

When the demons were shouting to "Kill them", more demons were being created, thus Kaal had sucked in their (breath) with their speech, so that they could not speak any more. (302)

When the demons lost their speech, then they got worried and from that worry even more demons got regenerated and then started confronting Maha Kaal. (303)

When their marrow fell on the ground many more demons were produced and an army of demons created, thus many more horrible demons, being furious with rage, woke up to life (thus getting ready to fight). (305)

Then Maha Kaal broke their skulls, and as their bone marrow fell on the ground, many more demons shouting "Kill them", were coming to life, who were very powerful and great warriors. (306)

Ehen Kaal getting enragaed. Took up his mace in hand and crushed the heads of demons and more demons got generataed from all the pieces which fell on the ground. (307)

Many of these demons, holding their maces in hands, were confronting him, and many opposed him holding their swords in hands. They were showing off their wrathfulness by shouting "Kill them", as if the clouds of doomsday of Maha Kaal had started gurgling. (308)

Now these demons, with thousands of weapons with each one, were attacking, Maha Kaal one by one, though Maha Kaal was not being affected by their attacks and all of them got merged in Maha Kaal. (309)

On seeing their weapons being merged with Maha Kaal, all the demons became furious with rage and taking up their weapons they started advancing against Maha Kaal. They were wielding their weapons with great fury and were shouting "Kill them" in all the ten directions. (310)

On hearing their sound of "Kill them", with his ears, Maha Kaal, taking up many weapons, also got furious with rage. He then wielded his weapons by challenging them with cries of "Kill them", thus destroying many demons in a moment. (311)

When their flesh and marrow fell on the ground, many more demons took up new forms and got generated. Thus these demons jumping with vigour and zeal, and shouting "Kill the enemy", they came in front of Maha Kaal in large groups. (312)

Maha Kaal then reduced these enemies in thousand pieces each, which resulted in further production of demons, whose flesh was being eaten away by vultures and pisach (evil spirits). (313)

The warriors, who had been reduced to bits and pieces, also got up to form as mighty warriors and then launched an attack. But MahaKaal, without having any fear about them, destroyed the whole army. (314)

Just before this, they were shouting to kill them and now the jackals and vultures were taking away their flesh. At times the ghosts andspirits (pisachs) were shrieking and now the evil-spirits and huge kites were making merry. (315)

Where the black cukoos and crows were making noise now the saffron of blood was being applied there. The kettle drums were looking glorious like the timbrels and were enamouring the minds of both gods and demons. (316)

The arrows were like the balls of lac filled with saffron and heavy spears, represented a bundle of dry colours (for holi festival), the shields were like the tabors, while the guns were like the syringes. (317)

It was a fierce battle, which had caused the Indra & Moon lok (lands) to tremble, and the animals or birds were equally terrified. They left their houses and fled towards the jungle. (318)

At places, wounded horses were making noise, while somewhere the warriors were confronting the enemy and launching an attack against them, while somewhere else the frightening laughter of Kaal could be heard. It was rather terrifying to hear the name of Kaal (god of death) only. (319)

The hair of the warriors were standing upright (were feeling frightened), while the cowards on watching then, hid themselves in the house. Both the virtuous or miserly persons were fully distressed. The cowards were running in all ten directions. (320)

Many warriors had dug in their feet, and started wielding their naked awords or double-edged swords. Then Maha Kaal, getting enraged struck(attacted) them with his weapen. All the saints were saved whereas the despots were kolled. (321)

The powerful warriors got themselves established in the battlefield. Let us watch (see) who wins and who loses finally ! From all the four sides the stubborn warriors, carrying tridents, spears, swords or daggers were thundering. (322)

Many bugles were sounded in that horrible battle. The young handsome charioteers from all four sides were roaring loudly. They were carrying weapons like tridents, spears, daggers and swords in the hands, while stubborn Rajas were getting enraged and launching an attack. (323)

Many long guns or guns, being pulled by elephants, were firing shots, while elsewhere guns pulled by horses,were spitting fire. Somewhere conch shells, drums, kettle drums were being sounded. At places warriors were patting their arms, while elsewhere Rajas were roaring. (324)

At places loud bugles, and drums were being sounded, while somewhere killed warriors or horses were lying on the ground. Somewhere young horse riders were trotting the horses, and at places horrible warriors were looking glorious in the battlefield. (325)

Somewhere horses were lying down or elephants were lying dead on the ground. Somewhere, warriors with quivers tied to their waists were lying dead on the ground. Somewhere mighty Rajas, patting their arms, were thundering. Many warriors were lying dead in the battlefield, while blood was oozing out of their wounds. (326)

When the demons had been killed by picking them out one by one, then many more demons arrived being furious with rage. They were looking glamorous with their quiver tied to their waists, while many warriors, by keeping the elephants ahead of them, were advancing forward. (327)

They were accompanied by many horse riders and they gathered in large numbers with sounding of drums and were advancing. They were sounding (playing) conch sells jhanjh and drums and were moving with four fold zeal and strength. (328)

Somewhere snail drums or kettle drums were being sounded, while warriors, with pattinig their arms, were thundering in the battlefield. Somewhere many mural, upang and flutes were playing while elsewhere else drums and jhanjhas were being played (creating jingling). (329)

Somewhere countless tambourines were being played, while somewhere thousands of clarionets and flutes were being played. Many drums placed on top of elephants, or great musical instruments were being played, and their number was beyond count. (330)

When such a fierce battle was being fought, then a woman named Dooleh Dei appeared one day (from there). She was riding a lion and her banner was flying, with glory, on seeing which the demon forces were running away. (331)

On its first appearance, she had killed many demons and crushed into pieces, those riding chariots, their banners were cut into pieces, while many were deprived of their legs. feet, heads or arms. (332)

Many types of warriors were attacked and cutting them into pieces, were thrown on the ground and many were dragged (destroyed) by holding them from their hair and the forces were crushed into pieces. (333)

At places, the swords' edges were shining, while at places horrible looking heads and trunks were throbbing. Many warriors, with weapons tied to their waists, were roaring loudly. while many warriors, leaving behind their weapons, were fleeing away. (334)

Many mighty and horrible looking warriors, were lying dead or unconscious on the ground while blood was throbbing out (oozing out) from their bodies like a fountain, making slight noise. Such a fierce battle was raging, which is beyond description. (335)

Somewhere evil-spirits, sucking this blood, were making noise, somewhere the crows eating human flesh, were making crowing noise. There a horrible battle was fought, but its true presentation is beyond my mind. (336)

Somewhere great demons were lying dead, while at places, with horrible looking teeth demons were lying, while some warriors were vomiting blood from the mouth in the battlefield. (337)

Those demons with long horns on their heads and with beaks long like very tall beings, had their eyes-blood red and very large like a tank, on seeing them one gets into doubt (about their existence). (338)

These demons were very powerful and great warriors, who had won over many enemies on land or in waters. They were very strong, powerful and frightening. They were killed by young girl (Duleh Dei) bypicking them one by one with a spear. (339)

Many warriors had been killed in the normal course, while the lion had torn the ears of many, while many warriors were crushed by Maha Kaal. The whole enemy force was scattered like the clouds. (340)

Many warriors had been killed with spears, and many were cut into pieces, and many had been killed by the sword edge. While many warriors were beaten to death with (iron) weapons. (341)

Many clever, handsome soldiers were killed with spikes (thorns) and daggers. Such warriors, attacked (and wounded) by various weapons were lying on the ground. It seemed as if pillars had fallen due to an earthquake. (342)

So many mighty warriors were lying on the ground in the battlefield, as if Indra had broken the mountains, with bajar arrows. Many were lying dead (down), cut into pieces, like Ghaus Kutab's plight (just like state of limbs) In worship on a Friday prayer. (343)

Many drenched in blood, were running away, as if they had come back home after playing holi (colours festival). They were fleeing like a gambler having lost his money. (344)

Whosoever faced the onslaught of a sword by opposing it, was killed in no time. They do not remain in world ate they proceed to heavens (riding) in a chariot. (345)

All those virtuous type persons, who were attacked while running away, were all thrown in the abyss of hell, while all those who offered sacrifice of their lives, were wedded by the fairies. (346)

Many of them had been pierced by bajar arrows while many others were lying down on the ground. Many charioteers, having quivers of arrows tied (with their waists) were lying on the ground but they were still aiming at their targets. (347)

Many warriors had raged a fierce battle, and having an obstinate attitude, were attacking by rushing at one another. Many drums, kettle drums and other instruments were being played while all the warriors were shouting to kill them. (348)

Challenging each other, they were wielding their weapons and picking up targets, they were shooting arrows against them. They were wounding the enemy with their spears by bending, down and many warriors liable of fighting with both the arms, were being killed. (349)

At places, the trunks of elephants were lying down, while at other places the heads of charioteers, horses and elephants were lying while elsewhere groups (clusters) of warriors killed by arrows, guns and cannons were lying. (350)

So many soJdiers had been killed in this manner and the enemy forces had been dissolved in many ways. On the other hand Duleh Dei, the rider of the lion, got furious with rage, while on the other side Maha Kaal took up his sword and attacked. (351)

At some places in the battlefield, the swords and daggers were shining and it seemed as if fish had been caught in the fishing net. The rider of lion, Dulch Dei, had destroyed the enemy and reduced the demons into bits and pieces. (352)

Somewhere the horses saddle covers were lying cut into pieces or at places the warriors along with their coats of mail, were looking glorious, lying down on the ground. Somewhere streams of blood were flowing, and it appeared like a running fountain in a garden. (353)

At places the evil-spirits were sucking blood while somewhere the vultures were having flesh to their full Somewhere the crows were flying around making noise, while at places the ghosts and pisach were moving around in a drunken state. (354)

Somewhere ghost women were laughing around while elsewhere the evil-spirits were clapping around and were laughing around. While the ghost women were moving around in a reeling drunken condition. (355)

The evil-spirits were moving around in the battlefield, while the vultures were eating flesh. Somewhere the ghosts and demons were laughing merrily while the ghosts were making fun. (356)

Somewhere the demons, with protruding teeth, were moving in the battlefield, while the ghosts were clapping. The stars (fire balls) were falling from the sky, thus destroying the demon army completely. (357)

A strong wind was blowing in the battlefield, where the warriors reduced to pieces were seen, while the crows in large numbers were crowing in a shrill voice, as if black-cuckoo (koels) were singing in the month of (Phalgan) March, being completely intoxicated. (358)

Thus the pond of blood was full like a second Mansarowar. The broken canopies(white) were looking glorious like the swans, while the other embellishments appeared like the water-born beings. (359)

So mewhere pieces of elephants were lyEng, along with the pieces of warriors. On one side the blood stream was flowing due to which the battlefield ground was turned into muddy Earth. (360)

The tent-pegging (jousters) had killed many warriors just like grain-parkers had woven some balls in" iron-rods. In the battlefield the warriors were lying in pieces. having been hit by swords (on wounds). (361)

This Kaal, with great fury, was showing his teeth and in a moment killed many powerful and strong warriors with canopies. (362)

Both fought a fierce battle, while the demons could not be killed even on being struck. Then Asidhuj Kaal) thought to himself, how to kill the demons. (363)

When Maha Kaal had sucked in all blood (with his power) then no more demons were regenerated. Then he ordained the god of death, who destroyed the whole army of demons. (364)

Then only one demon was left, who got frightened in mind, and was thinking while lamenting (at his fate) what should be done, as none of his tricks were working (was of any avail). (365)

Whosoever sought refuge at Maha Kaal's feet, was saved and no second demon was further produced, Kaal had destroyed all of them (devoured them). (366)

Choupaiee

The despotic demon did not realize (understand) anything and got annoyed with Malta Kaal again. He did not realize his own weakness Or strength and felt very proud within himself. (368)

He said, "O Kaall Do not feel puffed up and try to fight against me again. Let us decide it in the battlefield to-day that either Asidhuj dies or the demon was no more (dead). (369)

The Raja (King) of demons, without stepping backwards, did not run away from the battlefield. Even though his intestines were taken by the vultures to the skies, he was still shooting arrows with stubbornness. (370)

The demon king shot countless arrows in the battlefield, but Maha Kaal had cut them off in between. Then Maha Kaal had shot twenty-thousand arrows against the demon. (371)

Maha Kaal then got furious with rage, and again stretching the bow, launched an attack. With one arrow then he shot down the demon's banner and with the second arrow cut off the head of the enemy (demon). (372)

With two arrows, (Maha Kaal) cut off both the tilted wheels of the chariot in a moment and then with four arrows, the world's Lord had killed all the four horses. (373)

Then the world's Master, Asiket, cut off the demon's forehead with an arrow, and with the second arrow the world's Raja, Asidhuj, cut off the enemy hands. (374)

Then the world's Master, Asiket, cut off the head of the monster, when a shower of flowers was made from the heavens, and all came to congratulate him. (375)

And then said," O People's Raja! You deserve all praise, as you have protected the lives of helpless by killing the despots. O Creator of the whole world! Pray help me considering me as your devotee. (376)

O Lord! You get pleasure with the saints getting all comforts but get perturbed with the sufferings of your saints! You always realize everyone's sufferings, and always know our hidden feelings. (388)

O Lord-Creator! When you assume the form of attributes and create various forms of life (animate and inanimate world) then the whole worldly expanse takes place, and when you withdraw this worldly drama, then everything (animate) gets absorbed into your single entity. (389)

All the worldly forms of life, sing your praises as per their own perception (provided by you). O Lord! You are always distinct from your creations and this secret is known to all the Vedas or world's wise men. (390)

O Prime-Soul! You are formless devoid of all evils, non- aligned, (from the very beginning), pure, without beginning, improbable (unborn). Only fools try to describe Him, whose secret was not known to Vedas even. (391)

They try to (depict) realize Him in stone, and these foolish people are unaware of His secrets, they always call Mahadev as Shiva (Lord) but they know not the secret of the Formless. (392)

(O Lord!) As per the intelligence or wisdom of each individual, everyone tries to express your Greatness/Vastness in different ways. O Lord! Our worldly expanse is beyond. our comprehension, as to how the first worldly creation took place. (393)

The detailed (Episode) Story-First Parable

(O Aurangzeb!) I have no faith (value) for your oaths on the Lord Almighty (swearing by God) that the same Lord Almighty is the only witness between both of us. (I do not trust the veracity of your words even if you swear by God, who is your sole witness). (13)

(O Aurangzeb!) Your army generals and other advisers (councilors) are all liars and I do not believe a bit even, all these people . (14)

The person, who pins faith on the oaths, taken by Koran, of your courtiers (advisers), finally comes to grief only (as they are not trustworthy). (15)

(O Aurangzeb!) If someone is crossed by the bird (Hamayun's) Huma's shadow even (who is supposed to fulfill your desires) then even a (crafty) crow cannot harm him, however brave he might be. (Once I have taken the support of the Lord Almighty, then all your armies cannot frighten me with awe or your imperial power cannot cow me down.) (16)

If someone happens to take shelter under the care of a lion, then no other (inferior) animal like a goat, lamb or deer could cause any harm to him. As-such all the generals despatched by you, could not oppose me while the Lord's benign hand protects me. (With the Lord's protective support on my side, your forces could cause no harm to me.) (17)

Had I known the secret of the oaths by Koran (of your generals) then I would not have sacrificed my dearest troops in vain (fighting against such liars)? (18)

(Now the Guru details the battle of Chamkaur). When ten lakh troops of (the enemy) had swooped suddenly on forty of my starving men, then they were helpless against such hordes. (19)

Having set aside all the promises (of your generals) your troops had launched an attack suddenly, armed with weapons like swords, arrows and guns. (20)

(O Aurangzeb) Then I had no option left except facing the odds in the battle field, and had to take up weapons like bows and arrows or guns against them for fighting it out. (21)

(I had been forced into fighting against your troops with weapons. having no other option). When all other means and efforts are of no avail (things go beyond negotiated settlement), then it would be rightful (within our rights) to take up the sword in hand. (to take up arms is justified). (22)

(O Aurangzeb !) How could anyone have any faith in your oaths by Koran (to swear by Koran)? Or else you tell me where was the need for me to adopt this path (of armed solution) of conflict (23)

I never thought to myself that this manly person was behaving and changing designs (to suit his ends) like a jackal. (You were changing your tactics to suit your ends like a jackal). Or else I would never have adopted this path (of conflict) under any other pretext. (I would never have vacated Anandpur, having pinned my faith-in your false oaths by Koran). (24)

It is not worthwhile either to capture or kill a person who is under the spell of swearing by Koran of your men. (which were meaningless). (25)

As opposed to these oaths, your warriors in (dark) black uniform launched a sudden attack like a sworn of bees, and attacked with shout of war cries, raising hue and cry) in a sudden move with huge force in a single assault. (26)

Any warrior of yours who dared to come forward from behind the cover of a wall, was killed instantly with the striking of one arrow of mine. (Was done to death draped in blood with the striking of one arrow only). (27)

But the warrior who did not dare to leave the cover of the wall, was not faced with death (destruction) with the striking of the arrow. (28)

(The Guru had addressed Aurangzeb about the battle of Chamkaur saying that his army of a million soldiers attacked suddenly his forty starving sikhs but would not dare to wage a war openly and taking cover of a wall were saving their lives; infact whosoever came forward. .was killed instantly with the shooting of an arrow).Once I saw your general Nahar Khan, advancing in the battle feld for waging an open war, then I shot an arrow at him, which killed him instantaneously. (29)

(O Aurangzeb!) All your valiant pathans, who were gossiping in the battlefield, finally fled away from the battle field. (All your so called brave warriors who were (bragging) making tall claims, fled away from the battle field saving their lives, and none of them came forward to fight (a combat) it out). (30)

Then another pathan warrior came forward in the battle field for the combat (to fight) and he advanced like the torrential waters or like an arrow or like the bullet from a gun. (31)

That pathan launched many attacks with great valour, some of these assaults were very wisely planned while some of these attacks were rather foolishly organised. (32)

That Pathan made many (attempts) assaults and had been inflicted with many wounds. He managed to kill two of our man and finally gave up his life as well. (33)

However, the army general, Khwaja was a coward, and remained hidden behind the wall. He never came forward like a. warrior to face my men, and he neither made any attacks like a brave soldier. (34)

Alas ! In case I had the chance of perceiving the face of that coward. Khwaja Khan, then I would have received him with bestowing an arrow (I would have shot an arrow at him) thus making him face death. (Thus causing him to meet his destined end). (35)

Finally with shooting of many arrows and guns the warriors got wounded from both the sides who succumbed to their injuries finally. (36)

There was a great exchange of arrows and gun shots, almost like a shower (of rain) so that the land was turned red like the poppy husk (flowers) blossming all over. (37)

The battle field was littered with the human heads and feet (scattered all over). It appeared as if the whole battle field was filled with the marigold flowers blossming all over. (With hands and feet spread) alongwith their uprooted roots. (or like a vast polo ground). (38)

When the arrows were being shot with a cracking noise and the bows were also stretched with a cracking sound, the whole world was filled with (the din) of a tumultuous uproar from the frightened throng. (39)

Then the deadly arrows produced such a (din) hue and cry. Which confounded the mightiest of warriors even. (The arrows brought such havoc). (40)

(O Aurangzeb!) Then the multitude (hordes) of your forces fell upon my forty famished men, so what bravery could be expected of them? (What could be achieved by mere bravery). (How could my forty starving men face the enemy odds (hordes), but then they died fighting like brave soldiers?) (41)

Then the (worldly light) sun went down (it was sunset) and the moon (the night's master) shone forth brightly. (42)

The Lord then bestowed his benign benevolence on the person who had trusted the oath (of your men swearing by Koran) on Koran and the right path was shown to him. (The Lord was benevolent enough to guide me onto the righteous path, having pinned faith on the swearing by Koran of your men). (43)

The person, having faith in the Lord Almighty, is neither harmed nor does he suffer any afflictions, as no damage could be done to him or his person (with Lord's protection).The Lord saves him (his true devotee) from enemy onslaughts and takes him out of enemy encirclement even after killing his enemies, as he has pinned his faith on the Lord alone. (44)

(O Aurangzeb! Your countless hordes attacked us after we vacated Anandpur, believing their oaths (vows) on Koran, and then they chased us till we took shelter in Chamkaur fortress and your forces continued harassing us, but the Lord escorted me safely out of their encirclement). (O Aurangzeb!) I never knew that this so called manly person was a votary of Worldly wealth only and could go back on his vows even (promises) as he had no faith in true religion. (45)

(O Aurangzeb! I took you to be a true Muslim (truly religious) who would be true to his word, but it proved me (to be) wrong as you were only after worldly possessions, being a great liar and irreligious person). O Aurangzeb! Neither you were a truly religious person, being a devout Muslim nor you had any regard for an honest belief in true-religion. Neither you had any knowledge about the Supreme Lord nor, you had any faith in Mohanunad. (46)

(O Aurangzeb! You must remember) that a person having faith in true religion would never go back on his word (promises) and would always honour his vows (word). (47)

O Aurangzeb! I have no faith in a person like you, who would vow by Koran, only to disregard (go back) his oaths later, though he propagates that there is only one Lord Almighty. (O Aurangzeb! You are only a liar when you claim to be a true and honest man having faith in the Lord or Mohammad, as you have proved to be a total liar and untrustworthy, with no faith in Koran or Mohammad). (48)

(O Aurangzeb!) Now I will have no faith in your vows even a bit (on Koran) even if you were to swear by Koran a hundred times. (Your oaths are all lies). (49)

(O Aurangzeb!) If you were having the slightest faith in me. then you could have come fully armed and confronted me personally. (O Aurangzeb!. You had asked me to meet, you, but I could not have any faith in your word. So instead you could have come to meet me. if you had any trust in me but you had no faith in yourself even). (50)

Since you had sworn by the Lord or Koran, so it beloved you (it was your duty) to act according to your own word and accomplish the job of meeting personally. (51)

O King! If you had faced me personally, then the whole matter would have been sorted out with an open mind between us. (O Aurangzeb I You have been misled by your men. Had you met me personally then it could have been clarified that I had no personal enemity except fighting against oppression of despots). (52)

(O Aurangzeb I) Now it becomes your duty to function according to your own written claims after careful contemplation. (53)

Now a written letter would be given to you apart from personal clarification by Bhai Dya Singh. So now it rests with you to act according to your our promises (vows) and settle everything amicably, thus fulfilling your vows. (54)

(Now the Guru has expostulated some political considerations)

. In this world, a person should always honour his own words, but not a (worthless) person, who says something else while at heart he has some other designs. (55)

Whatever your Kazi (religious leader) has stated, I am also in agreement with it, as all these things are not beyond his sayings. If there is any truth in your statements, then you should come here personally. Whatever your Kazi has mentioned to me, I am fully supporting that, so now it is your bounden duty to meet me. (56)

In case, you want to peruse (see) the Koran by which you (through your, men) had sworn, then I could send you that even. (O Aurangzeb I) Your emissasy (Kazi) had brought your written oath by Koran, (which is with me) in case you want to see than, I could send you that Koran also, so that you could realize your promises). O Aurangzeb! You should try to appreciate the Lord's Will and do not molest (pester) your subjects on the advice of others. (65)

You have occupied the Emperor's throne, being the leader (chieftain) of all the subjects (people). Your justice is really strange and qualities are equally wonderful. (66)

Whatever justice is being practised by you, along with religious zeal you are showing all around, is really strange. I feel 'sorry for you on your doings, which are deplorable Alas! It is shameful to think of your kingly behaviour. (67)

(O Aurangzeb!) Your abstinence (from certain evil things) and temperate behaviour is really strange. Without following and practising Truth, all other talk is bound to result in damaging your image. (harming you). (68)

(O Aurangzeb!) Being barbarous (tyranical) in your actions, for should not wield the sword to cause bloodshed (of innocent people). You must bear in mind that the divine wrath will befall you, resulting in your death. (69)

O Man! Never be careless and try to recognize the True Lord (the path of Truth). The Lord is not bothered about anyone's flattery or sychophancy (untruthful behaviour). (70)

The Lord Almighty is free from awe (is fearless), being the king emperor and is the True Lord of both Earth and Sky. (His supremacy reigns over lands and heavens.) (71)

The Lord is the sole master (sovereign) of the Earth and heavens (being omnipotent). His abode extends over all households and is all pervading (being omniprence) and is the creator of all beings. (72)

All the beings, including the meek are extending to the mighty elephant, all are His creation only. "He is the main strength of all helpless people and the destroyer of all lazy and faithless people. (73)

The True Name of the Lord-supreme is the bestower of all benedictions to helpless and lowly persons. He is not dependent on our offerings to Him and is most carefree and independent. (Not bothered about our offerings or presents.) (74)

The Lord is free from (devoid of) any colour, sign or symbol. He is the only guide and our leader par excellence. (O Aurangzeb ! I always look upon the Lord-sublime as my guide. who is always by my side with His benign support.) (75)

You are under the burden of your oath on Koran, so it only behaves you to fulfil your promises with willing and supportive behaviour. (With happiness). (76)

(O Aurangzeb !) Now it is your bounden duty to use your cleverness and wisdom and accomplish your promissed without having recourse to the ill-advice of your courtiers. (77)

(O Aurangzeb ! You have managed to kill my four sons. but remember that my Khalsa army was still in readiness to crush your despotic rule, which was a great truth.) (So what if you have succeeded in killing my four sons, as the cobra with fangs was still alive to punish you). (78)

This does not prove your prowess (bravery) at all in that you are trying to extinguish the embers of fire, while the flame of fire (fire brand) is being excited to burst into a blaze. (By killing my sons, you have kindled the fire of revenge.) (79)

The poet Firdausi has remarked in his beautiful style stating that any work (function) accomplished in great haste is the job of a.Satan.only (haste belongs to a devil only). (80)

(O Aurangzeb!) When you happen to meet me personally, then you would realize the truth, being yourself a witness to the true facts. (the truth will emerge itself.) (81)

In case you happen to forget this truth, then the Lord Almighty will surely neglect your interest as well. (will forget you). (82)

But in case you prepare yourself to follow the path of righteousness (Truth), then you will be rewarded accordingly by the Lord-sublime (Allah). (83)

To safeguard the Religious duty' (to perform righteous acts of moral duty) is the noblest (task) job of true religion. Infact, to realize the true Lord, is a greater virtue than realizing oneself (self-realization). (84)

I know that you have no idea about the Lord's reality, as well the functions (tasks) performed by you so far have proved to be harmful to others. (O Aurangzeb !) You are posing to be truthful and a religious person, but you have no due of Truth, as you have harmed others always.) (85)

The benevolent Lord does not recognize you (The Lord has no value for you) .as he does not attach any importance to your existence even, not with standing your great might or huge empire. (86)

If you were to swear by Koran even a hundred times, then I would never attach any credibility to your word or oaths (vows). (O Aurangzeb! I was misled to trust your word (oaths by Koran) earlier, but now my Khalsa would never have any faith in your word or vows by Koran, as you alongwith your other religious leaders are all liars). (In the end, the Guru thanks the Lord.) The Lord is free from (devoid) any colour (shade), sign or symbol and is beyond and count and is indestructible. (He is infinite, so he is unlimited). He is too 'deep' to be probed and free from worldly bondage. He is free from any fallacy or fantasy and is (limit less) indescribable. (112)

The Lord is free from any malice or disaffection and is formless. He possesses no signs or symbols, having no hue (is colourless). He is unborn, in discriminate and indivisible and is indestructible. (free from extinction). (113)

The Lord is indivisible and indiscriminate. He is not governed by his actions and is devoid of any desires or passions. He is free from any fallacies (doubts) and has no sexual desires being without a female companion. (114)

M The Lord is free from any signs or symbols and is not committed to any faith, is indescribable and is free from extinction (indestructible) and is the bestower of all favours and benedictions to us. The first parable finishes here. (115)

Parables

There is only one Lord and victory belongs to him.

His sons used to wage war and engage themselves in battle like a wanton lion. They were great horse riders and were very agile in the use of hands. (3)

The Raja called (one day) all the sons by his side and made them seated on golden chairs independently. (4)

Then the Raja Mandhata asked his revenue minister, as to who out of his four sons was most suitable to succeed him on the king's throne (for kingship)? (5)

When the wise minister heard about the king's querry, then he praised the king's role and replied. (6)

The minister told the king, "O King! You are yourself God fearing. wise and prudent. You have realized the Lord's greatness and possess an independent thinking." (7)

The king gave the fourth son one grain of Moong pulse (green gram) and half a grain of chick pea (gram). That boy was of very independent views with great wisdom. (15)

That intelligent boy (son) brought home those grains and then brought another full (whole) grain of gram (from the market). (16)

He thought to himself that these seeds should be planted in the Earth, and with these seedlings (being buried) I should verify upon the value of my wisdom (intelligence). (17)

The fourth son, Dalip, then buried those two grains in the Earth (sowed them) and then thanking God for this effort, he wanted to grow them with great hopes. (18)

After six months of sowing those grains and with the change of new season, green leaves spurted out from them. (19)

That son continued to sow those seeds for ten years. Firstly he would look after their growth and then would split (cut) the crop. (20)

Dalip thus sowed those grains for about ten or twenty times, which resulted in a good crop of grams. (21)

By doing this job, Dalip managed .o collect lot of wealth for a comfortable living. It resulted from those two grains into heaps of those grains. (22)

With that hard cash, he bought ten thousand elephants which were mighty like mountains, with a proud gait of the Nile river. (23)

That son then bought with his wealth five lakh horses (half a million) which were loaded with gold and silver stocks. (24)

Then he managed to buy three lakh camels (three hundred thousand) which were loaded with the merchandise of gold and silver. (25)

Then Dalip, with the income of those two grains, established a new city. The city, established through the income of pulses (dal) was thus named Dilli (Delhi). (26)

From the income of second grain of green gram (moong) another town was established, named mungipatan, which was delightful to the friends but would break (harm) the hearts of the foes. (27)

Thus doing cultivation' twelve years had gone by and he amassed a huge amount of wealth, which was almost inexhaustible. (28)

When the king Mandhata had occupied the kingship of the seven islands, he had asked his ministers. (29)

The king had asked his ministers to bring him a piece of paper to check up as to what he had given his four sons (as mentioned in the paper). (3O)

The munshi (the clerk) had stopped the king from writing anything on the paper and raised his staff to give an answer to the king's querry). (31)

The king then asked his ministers to first check up the writing on the paper as to what all he had bestowed to his four sons (how many thousand rupees he had given to eachon). (32)

The king said to his ministers to examine the paper first as to what all he had granted to each of his sons. (33)

Then the ministers heard the talk of the king, who was being worshipped like the gods as he had the qualities of gods and was occupying the position of gods. (34)

O Then the king called his sons and asked then, "0 worldly sunshine (lamps illuminating the world) ! 0 suns of the land of Yamanld? "Bring out what all that I had granted you some years back, and show unto me.(At first the king asked the ministers to show him what all had been granted to each of his four sons, and then sent for his sons and asked them to produce what he had give them sometime back.) (35)

The eldest son replied that he had been granted elephants, out 'of which some had been killed in the wars and some others he had granted as gifts to his attendants or other people and now he did not have even a single elephant. (36)

Then the king asked his second son as to what he had done with those horses given to him (by the king). He also replied that some horses had been given as gifts to others and some had died (their natural dealths). (37)

Then the king asked his third son as to where were the camels given to him Show them all to me my dear son (my life) ! Tell me whom you have given away all those camels (38)

Such a valiant person appears gorgeous on the throne, with the associated power and wealth thus looking graceful. We are all sacrifice to his wisdom and art of living a thousand times. (52)

The rest of the threee sons were foolish eith a dirty mind. They did not possess a manly gait nor they had a sweet tongue. (53)

So the king Mandhara had desired to hand over his sovereugnty (kingship) to Dalip and though of giving him detail of his wealth also. (54)

Dalip would look graceful on the king's throne as he was very wise and the Master of the (Earth) land . (55)

The king had divested his other sons from the kingdom as they were neither wise nor free from vicious actions. (57)

The king then made Dalip seated on the throne and all the treasuries were opened up with keys and Handed over to him. (58)

Thus the king Mandhata handed over the reins of the kingdom to Dalip and got himself freed from the bondage of kingship. (59)

(Thus in this parable the Guru had explained to Aurangzeb the futility of his kingdom acquired through fraud and then perpetrating tyrannical rule of oppression as such he would have to pay for it. Dalip had established this city of Delhi based on justice and true religion as opposed to your barbarous rule, so no justice could be expected of him. In the end, the Guru prays to the Lord sublime for his benevolence).

O Lord Alimighty (Gurdev) ! May you bestow on the bowl of True nam, Which may help me in the battle field and for which may cherish my deserving life-span. (60)

O Lord ! May I be given your benevolent favour through your Grace, so that I may examine (Test) my fortuners and wield my sword. (against oppression) (May the Lord bestow me courage and strength of belief in his True name so that I could wage a war of justice against oppression by wielding my sword, thus establishing a religiou oder obeying your Will.) (61)

Here the Second parable is completed.

He possessed great treasures, being a wealthy king, having riches of all kinds. He had a sway over many lands like a king-emperor, and was the bestower of great giftsand benedictions to all and was a great bebefactor. (8)

When that king was on death-bed (about to die), then all the ministers got around him. (collected near him.) (9)

The ministers then asked the king as to who should be his successor, as the king of this great empire, and who should be decorated with the crown of this kingdom (who should be crowned as the sovereign of the empire), with the emblem of great aplendour and glory? (10)

(Pray tell us) Who should be thrown out of the empire? who should wear the crown of great fortunes and crowned as the next king? plesae tell us as to whom should we appoint as your worthy successor? (11)

The king replied that person, who had no feet or hands was devoid of his eyes or tongue, who had no sense, courage of fear of anyone, (such a person should be his successor). (13)

The person who does not possess a heart, which pulsates cordially; has neither courage, nor moral values, and neither has his senses intact. Who does not possess a keen nose, worthy eyes or two ears (who is fully watchful). (14)

(Such a person, who possessed all those qualities (as stated) deserves to be made the king if this land, and be would impart justice and perform his moral duties weil). (15)

The wise people got bewildered (non-plussed) on hearing the words of the king, and then they said some more words for the betterment of the subjects. (16)

Then all ministers were involved in calcukations (analyitical analysis) resulting in lot of delay in the decisions. (They could not give an outright answer to the king). (17)

All the ministers were wagging their tongues in circles (towards left and right). Then they took out their words from the mouth suddenly just as an arrow is shot from the bow They gave a prompt reply. (18)

O king ! You are very wise, possessing an independent thinking (brain) Why have you said like this?We are completely non-plussrd. (19)

A Person, whose condict in the world is like this then the handing over of kinhgdom to him, would be, for all practical considerations, ill advised. (O king ! What is the secret behind your words, that the kingdom be bestowed to be a person with such mean ir base qualities.) (20)

O King-emperor of land and oceans ! The world considers all these qualities (as stated by you) as flaws or defects, which you have mentioned as virtues of the individual. (21)

Neither you have been repulsed due to defeat, in the battle field nor you have ever abused the enemy. Moreover no enemy of yours has ever pointed out any flaw in your writtings. i.e. no enemy has ever disobeyed your orders or proclamations. (22)

"O king ! you have never allowed any respite to your foes but have never harmed your friends. You have never turned away emptyhanded any beggar or needy person from your doors; moreover you have never let enemy free from tormenting .i.e. the enemy has always been thrashed badly. (23)

(O King !) You have never given a chance to any writer to write against you, giving out your short coming, or flaws. Moreover you have given a place of honour to those telling the truth. (24)

(Thus in this parable, the Guru has asked Aurangzeb to adopt thosequalities which are essential to deserve the kingdom of India, byfollowing the path of righteousness and true justice. Further more theGuru is ..searching the Lord for his Grace.) O Lord ! May you bestow me (with your Grace) the hue of true name,which is worthy of me and would be of help to me in the battle-field !(56)

O Lord Guru l May you bestow me with your bowl of truename, whichwould convert an old man of hundred years into an exuberant youth !) (57)

Here the third parable in completed.

"By the Grace of one Lord. Victory to the True Lord!"

The Lord-Supreme is the bestower of the means of sustenance anddistributor of food and is always benevolent. He is the benevolentbenefactor who frees us from the worldly bondage and is a true guide,leading us onto the right path, being a great merciful Lord. (1)

The Lord is the supporter in extending our heart-felt desires, thebestower of wisdom, and a great judge (of our actions) He enables us tofollow His Will and abide by His ordains, providing us with thenecessary strength. He is the benefactor of our livelihood and all ourvirtues (good qualities). (2)

O Aurangzeb ! I have heard the story of a woman, whose height wasequal to the height of weeping cypress, grown on the banks of a rivergarden. (3)

That king came to the river Ganga ior having bath there, with such aspeed just like an arrow leaving the bow or a bullet shot from a gun. (5)

The king then thought of organising a swayamber (marriageceremony) for his daughter's marriage, so that if she approved of anyyouth, then her marriage could be solemnised. (6)

"O pure soul! During the swamwar if you like any prince, then youcould get married to him ." (7)

The king then seated his daughter on the loft of a seven storeyedmansion, and her beauty was resplendent like the moon and the sun .(8)

According to the kings orders, the drum beaters started their drumbeats, and the king made the daughter responsible for taking adecision (for an answer to his words) (9)

O daughter ! First of all, you have to select someone whom you like ,and then he will be welcomed as my son-in-law. (11)

The king showed many princes to the daughter, but she did notapprove of anyone from their conduct and appearance. (12)

Finally that princess found one prince named Subhat Singh asacceptable (suitable), who was thundering like the crocodile.(He was agreat warrior, roaring in the battle field and he was liked by her . (13)

The king then called all the smart and beautiful princes in theassemblage, and made them seated on chairs separately. (14)

The king then asked the daughter, "O well-mannered daughter! whichof these prices have you selected as suitable.?" (15)

The king made the brahmin wearing the sacred thread in front of him and he remarked that this king was having his over the northern lands. (16)

Then the brahmin announced louldly to be heard by all that he wanted to marry his daughter bacchatramati, whose beauty was unparralled as it was resplendent and shining like the moon in the sky or the soon on earth. (17)

The king's daughter remarked that "She did not like anyone of these princes. on hearing there words the king again asked her," O daughter full of virtues and goodness ! Please look at these prince carefully again." (18)

That girl (princess) had a second glance of all the princes, but she could not find anyoneto her liking who could be the gem (diamond) of her heart (could be suitable to her choice). (19)

After this, the swam war postponed that day and all the organisers got up and attendant closed the gates. (20)

The king then asked his daughter, "O beautiful daughter, captivating all hearts! Please look at the faces all the princes and tell me which of them appeals to you." (23)

The princess, like the flower of the garden, after hearing the father's Words , came to the assembly. Her body was glorious like the golden waters and her body movements were agile like the mercury. (24)

The princess started moving towards the countless princes (seatedthere) and her appearance was looking bright like the red flowersblossoming in the spring season. (Basant season). (25)

The beauty of the princess had enamoured the hearts of the princesand they were licking the dust on seeing her charm just as thewarriors fall on the ground in the battle field (being killed).(26)

The princess, named Bachhatramati was the daughter of the king, whowas looking charming like the moon in the sky with a delicate beautifulbody of the fairies. (28)

She had appeared 1n the Swamwar like the moon in the sky, and shepossessed qualities of a goddess and her body was also resembling that (29)

Let us watch now, whose fortune favours the wealth of her beauty ?Whose dream will be fulfilled by this beatuty and satisfy his desires'?(30)

The princess got (pleased) appealed by the prince named Subhat Singh,whose appearance and disposition was very illuminating, with an eternalsmile on his face. (31)

The king immediately sent the brahmin to function as an intermediary(between the two) towards the prince Subhat Singh. The brahmin told RajaSubhat Singh, "O king-emperor! You are a shining star of the galaxy (of theworld) please agree to my request."(32)

The princess is charming like the poppy flower, and delicate like thejasmine flower. She is most suitable for you in all respects, so pleasemarry this princess. (33)

On hearing the words of the brahmin, Subhat Singh said, " I havealready got one wife at home, whose eyes are beautiful like those of anoffspring of a deer." (34)

(My wife is charming and delicate like that of a deer offspring.). So Ican not accept this princess as my wife. This is the ordain of Koran andthe oath of the prophet as well. (35)

When the princess Bachhitramati heard about the refusal of the kingSubhat Singh to accept her as his wife, then she got flared up with rage.(36)

Then the princess in her wrathfulness announced that the person, who couldwin me in a battle (fight) would be my spouse and the king of this land.(37)

The princess then wore the coat of iron (protective cover) and got ready(started) for the battle immediately. (38)

The princess, beautiful like the full moon got into her chariot, having tiedthe sword to her waist and took up some arrows in her hand. (39)

The princess, wearing the coat of mail, fought with great passion andenthusiasm and tried to win the battle by using arrows and the gun.(41)

The princess fought with a shower of arrows and such might that many of the enemy troops were killed. (42)

In the battle, the arrows and guns were shot / fired like a shower so that many warriors got killed in the battle. (43)

Then Raja Gaj Singh launched a sudden attack in the battle field justas an arrow is shot from a bow or the bullet leaves the gun. (44)

That Raja Gaj Singh advanced like a demon with great wrath fullness and he was holding in his hand a mace as big as an elephant. (45)

That bold woman shot an arrow at that warrior and on striking of the arrow, Gaj Singh fell down on the ground from his horse. (46)

Then the second king Ran Singh came forward in the battle field furious with rage, like a moth falling on the lamp (candle) with great fervor (zeal). (47)

The brave woman, having a sturdy built like the tigress, struck himwith her (wielding) sword that Ran Singh fell down in the garden with weeping cypress trees grown there. (48)

The two princes, one from the town of Amber and the other from Jodhpur,came forward to fight against her in the battlefield. Then the beautiful womanwith a body shining like pearls, advanced facing the two princes, with grace andsprightly movements. (49)

Then the princes struck the swords on her shield as she came forward, thusproducing sparks shining like Nails with the striking swords. (50)

After the death of these two princes, the third prince of Boondi State cameforward in the battle field with great prowess, just as a roaring lion swoopson the offspring of a deer. (51)

Then the fourth prince Jai Singh came with such a fury in the battlefield, just as ahuge mountain moves forward (53)

The fourth prince, Jai Singh, was also given the same type of syrup as wasgiven to his friends earlier (was killed) and he could not trace back even a step(could not step backwards). (54)

Then one king of a foreign (Farangi) land another king of Poland(country) landed in the battle field roaring like a lion. (55)

Then the third king, a European, with the glory of the sun and the fourthking of Negroes (Habash land) launched an attack with such a force as acrocodile strikes (at the prey) in the water. (56)

The (brave) princess struck the first one with a spear, the second one with afist, the third one was trampled under her foot, while the face and head ofthe fourth one was crushed with her shield. (57)

All the four princes had fallen on the ground, never to rise again, andtheir souls had flown to heavens, (they were killed). (58)

No other person came forward to face the princess in the battle field, just asno one dares to face the crocodile, living in water. (59)

Then with night fall, the moon shone forth with its (army) galaxy of stars,and the army of kings also came back to their resting place with greatpomp and show. (60)

Then, with the dawn of day, the spring head (source) of light, the sun,shone forth with full vigour (sat on its throne), just as a king sits on thethrone. (61)

The warriors from both sides, fully armed, in a state of preparedness,with their shields in hands, came to the battle field. (62)

The warriors from both sides came thundering like the clouds, some ofthem got wounded while some others were killed. (63)

The shooting of arrows produced a (stirring) shrieking noise, and thegun shots produced a clattering sound with the battle field,and variousnoises were coming from all the sides. (64)

There was a furious (fierce) battle fought with the use of arrows, guns, swords, axes, spears, javelins, bows and shields and all types of weapons.(65)

Then in the battle field, a demon, like a black crow, appeared who was roaring like a tiger, and was trumpeting like an elephant. '(66)

That demon then struck (shot) arrows like the shower of rain continuously and his sword shone like the lightening in the clouds. (67)

From both sides the drums were beating loudly (with the drums beating wide open) and the battle field was littered with corpses all over. (The battle field was filled with death- knells and dead bodies were rolling all around). (68)

When the arrow shot by the princess Bachhitramati would strike the target, then it would pierce hundreds of the ribs of mighty warriors having as sturdy bodies as an elephant. (69)

Thus the princess shot many arrows at that demon, as a result of which, the demon fell down on the ground like a huge mansion. (70)

Then another demon resembling a huge vulture came to the battle field, who was mighty like a tiger and as swift as a leopard. (71)

The princess struck the demon with a mace in such a manner that he got wounded badly and fell down on the ground like an uprooted tree.(72)

Then no other warrior dared to face the princess, who was beautiful like the moon and had come to the battle field for fighting against anyone. (73)

The king of China removed the crown from his head, while the black evil-spirit opened its mouth, meaning the sun then went down (was set) and the dark night had befallen (74)

The night had befallen along with an (army) galaxy of stars, and the nightstarted the game of another type. (75)

The princes came back to their camps (abodes) and were heaving deep sighssaying, "Alas! It is rather shameful for us that we could not conquer (subdue)this princess even." (76)

The annies of both sides got ready with great vigour and started pouring in thebattle field from all comers (along with) armed with arrows and guns. (78)

The arrows, with great striking power, were being shot immediately ,which brought great vigour in the arms of the warriors (which raised their fury). (79)

When the whole army was killed (all the troops) in the battle, then onlyone warrior named Subhat Singh was left alive in the battle field. (80)

The princess then addressed Subhat Singh saying, "O Greatest warrior of the world ! Either you marry me or get ready to fight with me by taking up your bow." (81)

Both the bodies got red coloured in the battle and their breasts wereturned red with blood oozing. (Both their bodies became red colouredwith bloodshed.) (94)

In the battle field there were seen black (dark) warriors dancing around andthe fast steeds (horses) of Prangash land were jumping around likeleopards.' (95)

Multi-coloured (spotted), dark, with patches and painted in different colours,the horses were trotting and jumping like the peacocks. (Many colouredhorses were seen jumping around the battle field.) (96)

With the striking of arrows in the battle, the coats of iron (protective covering)including hehnets and the protective coats of horses were broken into pieces andscattered around. (97)

With the shower of arrows in the battle, there were sparkles of fire seencoming out of the protective covering (coats of mail). (98)

(In the battle) the horses of the brave warriors resembling lions started jumping(trotting) around, so that their hooves made the Earth multi-coloured like theleopard's back. (99)

With the stream of arrows flying around, the heat (sparks of flames) producedwas so strong that the warriors wits were at an end, and they had no sense orwere mentally deranged. (100)

Both of them were involved in a battle so fiercely that there were no swords inthe scabbards, or arrows in the quivers left with them.(The swords were brokenand arrows finished) (101)

Both of them continued fighting till it was evening without having food even. Finally both of them fell down unconscious on the ground. (102)

Both of them got exhausted by continued fighting as they were engagedin fighting like two tigers, two leopards or two hawks who fought aterrible duel. (103)

In the meantime the sun was set and the whole world was filled withpitch darkness. (The dark thief of Habsh land stole the golden coin,with the world becoming the pillar of smoke and dust.) (104)

Then on the third day, the sun shone forth brightly and the night'sdarkness had disappeared. (On the third day the sun, with its shiningbrilliantly on the sky, had taken away the ball of night with its stick andthe whole sky was lit like the moonlit night.) (105)

On the fourth day's battle the ten thousand elephant and twelve thousand horses moving with the speed of Nile river got killed. (118)

On that day, ten lakh infantry troops were killed, who were youthful and agile like the tigers and were great warriors having fought and with proven prowess in earlier battle. (119)

Four thousand chariots had been (broken) smashes into pieces during this battle. warriors, having the strength of fighting and killing lions and adept in the art of warfare, were also killed. (120)

The princess Bachhitiumati then shot four arrows, which killeld the four horses of the chariot of Subhat and then with another arrow she killed the charioteer also. (121)

With the third arrow the princess shot an arrow on the forehead of Subhat Singh in Between the two eye-brows and with the striking of the arrow Subhat Singh writhed (throbbed) with pain so much just as a snake gets agiated on being deprved (removed) of a treasure. (122)

The princess then shot the fourth arrow on Subhat Singh, Which made him unconscious and he became senseless. He now got over his (doubts) misunderstanding and forgot completely about his resolution (Vow). (123)

The fourth arrow had hit the wind pipe (of Subhat Singh) and he fell down on the ground. (124)

The princess had realized that the man was half=dead and had fallen on the ground like a proud (intoxicated) tiger. (125)

The princess, coming near Subht Singh said, "O wonderful warrior king ! Why are you lying a sleep in this dust of bloodshed?" (128)

"O dearest young prince, worthy and dearer than my own life even. At this juncture I have specially come to have a glance at you only." (129)

On hearing t hese words of words of the princess, Subhat Singh said, "O lady of great fortune ! Why have you come to this dreadful place?" (130)

The princess then remarked, "I had come here for the sole purpose of taking away your corps in case you had died, and in cue you were still alive, I should your thank the Lord-suoreme (for this benevolence)." (131)

The words of the princess appealed to Subhat Singh so much and he said, "O silver-white. coloured (shining) lady, (O lady with a silver-lining ! with a dilicate frame (like a lotus !)" (132)

"O lion-hearted (gracious) lady ! I have become your bondman (you have enslaved me), so tell me now what you had desired of me, so that I could bestow on you the same gift." (benediction) (133)

The princess then said, "O wariior, worthy of fighting and accomplishing an onerous task ! make me your spouse (wife) and bless me with all the good fortune thus." (134)

Subhat Singh then opened his and (struck) splashed his feet on the ground in repentance. Then he performed the tradition (practice) of the kings of olden times. (135)

The princess then took Subhat Singh on her charitar and brought him to her palace. Her father the king of the land, then acclained his deliht by beat of drums. (The king expressed his pleasure by beating of drums.) (136)

With the hearing of the noise of music Subhat Singh regained his full consciousness (senses). He opened his eyes and asked "in whose house he had been brought and made to rest. (137)

The princess then remarked that she had been vicorious in the battle and attained him as her prize for victory: It was throught the battle alone that she had attained him as her spouse. (138)

Subhat Singh then felt ashamed and greatly perturbed at her spoken words. He then said, "O Princess ! Whatever you (would) say, would be acceptable to me". (139)

(Through this parabha the Guru has tried ti axplain to Aurangzeb that the princess had own over Subhat Singh through war , even though he had refused het offer and she kept her word.)

"O Aurangzeb you have neither fulfilled your word like the princes, nor felt repentent at going back on your oath, and still you call yourself god-fearing and honest king.")

(Now the Guru has appealed to the Lord-subline for bestowing him the blessing of His True Name.)

"O Lord May you bestow on me the bowl of True Name, which I need at akk tlmes." (140)

O Lord ! You are the only true guide of all, Showing us the right path and you alone ae capable of breaking the claoms of our wordly bondage. You are the only support in the world hereafter. (1)

O Lord-sublime ! you are our sustainer, who provides us the means of livelihood and sustances and the only manistay during our hardships and applications. you are our benevolent Lord, forgetful of our shortcomings (forgive of our acts of omissions and commissions) and omni-scient knowing all our secrets. (2)

O Aurangzeb ! I have heard the story of a kazi (muslim religious leader) Who had no equal in his virtues. (3)

That Kazi had a youthful woman (wife) at home, Whose beauty wad a source of joy and every onlooker would sacrifice himself on her beauty. (Every onlooker would be her youthful beauty.) (4)

On seeing the beauty of that woman, even the jasmine flower would feel belittled before her and the poppy flower would also feel ashamed before it and it would feel worthless (insignificant) in comparison. (5)

On perceiving the charm and elegance of that woman, even the moon felt (ashamed) worried and was reduced to half (its size) due to jealousy. (Even the moon light would feel dimmed (dull) beforethe woman's charm.) (6)

Whenever that woman would move out of her house for some purpose (task), then the flirting creeper of love would pine (be in agony) on perceiving her long swining tresses from her shoulders. (7)

The prince then told the woman, "At first you bring the beheaded head of your husband head of your husband, the kazi, then this house of mine will belong to you (then I could accept you as my spouse). (12)

The woman on hearing the words of the prince, kept this secret to her heart and accept you as my apouse). (13)

When the woman found her husband a sleep in a sound slumber, she cut off his head by taking a sword in her hand and striking him down. (14)

That woman, having cut off the head of her spouse, proceeded to the spot where her beloved prince, Raja Sabal Singh was resting. (15)

On approaching the prince, she said, "O Prince ! I have done exactly what you had advised me to do. I have brought the beheaded head of my husband before you." (I have bought in your presense the head of my spouse, as desired by you). (16)

"O Prince ! if you so desire, I am prepared to cut of my head even and place it before you, .as I have loved you with my body and soul as my beloved. (paramour)." (17)

"When the young prince saw the cut-off head of the kazi, he got terrified, and he told the woman," "O contentious woman!" (19)

"When you could have behaved with your husband in such a horrible (cruel) manner, then what eay will you bahave and treat me as a friend 7" (What friendship could I expect of you?)" (20)

"(O woman !) I would prefer to restrain myself (divert myself) from your friendship. I would rather seek your benevolence to leave me alone." (I am overawed with your conduct and would request you to show this favour of friendship to someone else). (21)

If you could have treated your spouse in such a truthless manner, then I could expect a similar treatment for me even from you. (22)

On hearing these words of words of the prince, the woman threw down thr head from her hands and started beating her breast and face (started lamening and crying) with both her hands. (23)

That woman then told the prince, " you have gone back on your (words) promise (shown your back), so the Allah. (Lord almighty) would also show his back to you, when he would sit on judgement like the Kazi (on dooms day)." (24)

She threw the head (of Kazi) there only, and came back to her (house) palce. She then lied down alongwith the corpse of the Kazi. (25)

Then she threw dust in her head with her own hans and said, "O true friend of the Kazi please rise ! (from slumber). (26)

"O folks ! (O people !) pray see this distardly act of some cursed person who has killed my spouse , Kazi, with a single (strong) blow !" (27)

The people (gathered there) them followed up the blood stains (marks) on the route leading upto the place. (Where the head was lying) (chasing the blood-stains the people reached the prince's place), (28)

That woman then led all the people to place, where the head was Kazi was lying. (The woman took people to the place of the prince.) (29)

The king Jahangir remarked that he would hand over this person (accused) to the lady, and she could punish him as she wanted. (32)

The woman then ordered the hangman to cut off the head of this unfortunate person with a single blow of the sword. (33)

When that young prince saw the sword, then he trembled like a heavy tree of weeping cyprus. (34)

(Thouhgt this parable, the Guru had explained to aurangzeb his villaonous acts, having no faith in Allah (God) or honest living. The subjects were inder his bad influence, resulting in general moral turpitude. So he should mend his ways and lead a pious life.)

"O Lord ! May you bestow on me the blessing of your True Name, Which I need for my (Moral uplift) Salvation!" (50)

"O Lord ! May I be blessed with your benevolent benediction of the Name, so their my mind be enlightened with the light of the knowledge like a lamp." (illuminating its surroundings). (51)

Here the fifth parable is completed.
"By the Grace of one Lord-Sublime
Victory to the Lord Almighty.

The king of that damsel was called Kaisaro, who used to wear a Roman hat, and he was radiant (glorious) like the sun and shining elegantly like the moon. (4)

One day, as the sun rose, the king went out for hunting and he took Along with him many mountain cats, hawks and falcon-like birds etc. (and came to the forest). (5)

The king came out in the jungle, onto the hunting ground and killedmany stags, deer and tigers. (6)

During the same time another king of the western land (area), happened to come there, who was very brave, having his hallow like the moon, and his roar (thunder) was like that of a lion. (7)

Both the kings faced each other, being furious with rage, just as two tigers swoop on one and the same deer. (10)

Both of them were roaring just as two dark clouds thunder, when they happen to strike against each other with their pointed spears like the pointed straw ends. (11)

They showered their flying arrows against each other in a stream(continuously), as if both the Earth and sky were covered with the vultures spreading all over. (12)

Both the kings were challenging each other shouting loudly just as the god of death (Izrael god) blows a puff in a (pipe) clarionet thus producing a certain note. It appeared as if both were facing each other and attacking like the god of death (it was doomsday for both). (14)

There was utter confusion in the army of Arabs and the western king was thus victorious. (15)

The king of Arabia was left alone (in the field) when the evening approached and the sun had set. (16)

When the Arab king had lost all his strength and pride, he was caught(by the enemy forces) just as a thief gets caught in the night and is put under arrest (is arrested), similarly this king was imprisoned (taken as prisoner). (17)

The Arab king was taken to the western king (of western land) in bondage. That king was caught just as the (ascending mode of moon)demon Rahu covers up the moon. (18)

The news of the imprisonment of that king finally reached his people (at home) but there seemd to be no way out (to get him released). Neither it was possible to get him out of prison secretly nor was it possible to fight it out bravely and get him released. (19)

Then some wise men assembled together and felt a sense of shame and announced (circulated) the news of the king, (having gone astray) having gone missing somewhere. (20)

When the minister's daughter heard this news, she took her sword, tied to her waist and managed to collect some arrows. (21)

Then that girl dressed herself the Roman style, studded with golden borders and riding the saddle of a horse, she reached the battle field. (22)

That damsel then moved towards the western king with great agility (like Whirl pool) with the speed of wind. She kept the bow and quiver of arrows, from Klan land, On her shoulders. (23)

That girl then, going in the presence of the king, saluted him bravely and said, "O King ! You are like a lion, thundering like clouds and could tear apart your enemy into pieces. (24)

In case my king learnt about this thing from me, then he would destroy you from your very roots even (cut you from your roots). (28)

When the steel-framed king heard these words, then he started trembling like the jasmine leaves. (29)

The king thought to himself that if these grass-cutters could give such a fight to us, then their king would be truly very brave. (Then the bravery of their king could not be imagined)." (30)

The king then called all his ministers, and started having secret talks with them. (32)

The king told his ministers, "You must have seen with what bravery, these grass-cutters had fought against us, which had reduced lour land into dust(which had destroyed our land completely)." (33)

(He further remarked), "God forbid, if he happened to attack our country, then our land will suffer badly. (Our country will undergo hardships). So my advice to you all is, that we should release all these grass-cutters to the great and fortunate king."(34)

The king sent for all the prisoners, and then handed them over to the person, seated next to him. (35)

"You have become care fore from this hard task without any labour (easily).0 Brother ! You take charge of these prisoners. You are in fact, very dear to, me, more than my life." (36)

Then the ministers daughter, adorned her turban laps with one hand, and the second hand's grip was on her sword only. (37)

She then struck all the prisoners with four lashes each and said, "O worthless (aimless) and careless workers !" (38)

"You, had, come here for cutting and taking grass, was there no grass in our territory ? The one Lord-sublime is a great witness to that." (39)

Then the girl said, "My falsehood is known only to the Lord Almighty, who is a great forgiver (of us all), as he alone is my manistay. " (40)

She managed to get her king, the master of the throne, released and took 'him away from that dangerous spot. (41)

(The Guru had advised Aurangzeb to seek pardon from the Lord for all his falsehood, (like that girl), if he had the strength of character, and should repent for all his sins.") (The Gum now beseeches the Lord Almighty for his benevolence)."O Lord-sublime ! May you bless me with the benediction of your True Name, soas to realize that the Lord Allmighty, the master of intelligence (wisdom) was pervading throughout the whole world (being omni-present)." (42)

"O Lord-sublime! MY only prayer is that I may be blessed with the benediction of Time Name, So that I could conquer the enemies like sexual desire, etc and be victorious in the battle of life," (49)

Here the seventh parable is completed.

The Lord is our greatest benefactor and forgiver of all sins and vices and bestower of peace and tranquility of mind . He alone blesses us with the strength to lead our lives as per His Will (ordains) and bestows us with means of sustenance and worldly pleasure along with gratification: (His Grace). (1)

The Lord-sublime is the king and master (Gum) of both the worlds (here and Here after). The Lord is bestowing His favours and benedictions to all the beings and blesses us with comforts and amenities of life. (2)

(O Aurangzeb!) I have heard the story (anecdote) of a great king, who was most charming and bestower of benefactions (charities and gifts).(3)

The king possessed a beautiful charming and glorious personality and used to spend his days (life) in enjoying music (listening to music) and the pleasure of having wine (taking liquor and listening to music). (4)

He was a great warrior, intelligent (full of wisdom), and praiseworthy and his appearance (personality) was overflowing with the signs of valour and bravery (was a warrior par excellence). (5)

The woman was having handsome features, was very jovial and was always cheerful in appearance. (She was blossoming with prosperity). She possessed a sweet tongue, with very clear and transparent (appealing) demeanour (habits) and with high thinking (full of wisdom). (7)

Her appearance was very charming (with appealing personality), with a pleasant disposition (temper) and was known in the world for her beauty. She was very clever and intelligent in her talk (conversation) with a sweet tongue. (8)

She had two sons (shining) like the sun and the moon. They possessed a good nature and (could evaluate and appreciate Truth) and were seekers of Truth. (9)

Both the boys were very active (with agile movements) and adept in the art of warfare. (Keen fighters). They would face the enemy in battle like a lion or a crocodile. (fight the enemy with great valour) (10)

Both the sons could vanquish the elephants and kill the lions (infighting). They would fight in battles like lions of steel (were lion-hearted with a steel-like strong body). (11)

The mother of these two boys got en amoured by some person and fell in love with him. That man was delicate like the flowers, and the woman was (intended) keen lover of flowers. (worshipper of flowers). (13)

At night fall both the man and woman came to their sleeping place (bed room). That man happened to glance those two mighty boys. (14)

(On seeing the boys, the man told the woman that he could not come openly in their presence. So you make some arrangement to get rid of them.). That woman then sent for those boys turn by turn and made them unconscious through music and wine, (by giving them liquor). (15)

When she found that both had got drunk and became unconscious, then with a stroke of the sword, She beheaded "both of them with her own hands. (16)

Then she struck both her hands on their heads and started shouting with great anger. (17)

Where is king Taimur and king Babar ? Where were the kings Hamaiyun and Akbar? (45)

(The Guru has tried to make Aurangzeb realise, how this wicked woman had killed her two young sons for the sake of enjoying her love affair with another person. When asked by the angel to seek some favours, she only asked for the company of her beloved and becoming young again. She later died with the load of her sin on her head, and she had to suffer in the next world for this sin. You also have imprisoned your father, killed your brother, Dara Shikoh. When you will appear in the Lord's court after your death, you should have repented for your sins and proceed with a clean heart.)

(The Guru then prays to the Lord-Almighty).

"O Lord -supreme ! (O True Guru !) May I be blessed with your Graceand the red coloured tumbler of Farang country, which will be of help to me in dispelling my vices. My only request is that I may mingle with you after this life, ridding myself of sexual desires, anger or other vices." (46)

The Lord-sublime is accomplished in his magical powers and is highly benevolent and kind. He keeps us sustained with his benefactions and makes us follow His Will (His ordains) and is the greatest benefactor of all our benedictions. (1)

The Lord has created both the Earth and the heavens for those engaged in His Meditation. Both the worlds, here and hereafter, along with the whole universe, are under the ordains (control) of his saints (Bhakats) (are the domains of His beloved saints.) (2)

Then the king sent for a female attendant, who took her at night to his palace. (14)

The king told this attendant, that he had seen a woman, tall like a cyprus tree, with a silver like shining face and she was most beautiful like the moon with an elegant and glorious appearance like the sun. (15)

(He said) My heart is pining to meet her just like a fish out of water and throbbing-in the muddy water. (slush). (16)

(He told her), you are my blooming emissary (like a flower bed). Please go to my faithful friend. (17)

On hearing these words of the king, the housemaid went there and related the whole story to him from beginning to end. (19)

On hearing this awkward thing from the maid, he felt greatly pained at wearing womanly (female) dress on his body and was filled with hatred (for himself). (20)

He thought to himself that if he disclosed this secret to anyone, then what will be his fate in the world.? (21)

So he told the queen, "O my beloved! The king, having seen my beautiful face, has shown his liking for me. O my faithful friend! Now you tell me what should I do?" (22)

The queen told him, "You need not get worried and frightened, as I shall make some arrangement. In the very face of the king, I will keep your with me for four months. (within his knowledge). (24)

Saying these words, the queen took him along with her and went to bed, being completely careless about anything. The lion-hearted king then came to know about the whole affair from his maid. (25)

When the king heard about this whole thing from the maid, he was trembling from head to foot, getting furious with rage. (26)

So the king came to the place along with the maid, and saw both of them sleeping there. On seeing this, he was agitated and became red hot like the sun from head to foot. (27)

The king felt that "she got the news of my views, as such she had become fully cautious and does not sleep alone." (28)

Both of them were sleeping together on one bed only, so my manoeuvre (trick) did not work. God alone is my witness. (29)

The king thought to himself (in his mind) "in case I had the chance of seeing her separately away from this bedroom, then like the new moon night, I would join with her (get interlinked) like the sun or moon."(30)

'That day the king went away and came again the next day, and the king saw them both sleeping together clasping each other in their arms. (in embrace). (31)

The king thought in his mind that it was rather sad. "In case I had seen this woman separate from the queen, then I would have swooped at her like a male lion. (attacked her). (32)

The king went away on the second day, and came again on the third day. Seeing them sleeping together, he again went back. (33)

On the fourth day again he came and saw them sleeping together. He was wondering and went back and was thinking in his mind. (34)

"Alas! Had I seen her separated from the queen, then I would have enjoyed sensuous pleasure with her." (I would have fixed the arrow in the bow.) (35)

The sixth day, the king came and saw them together as before. He got furious with rage and remarked like this. (Spoke with his tongue) (37)

"I have not seen the enemy, as such I should not cut him into pieces. Alas! I have not been able to place the arrow in the bow (I could not enjoy sensuous pleasure)." (38)

(The king said), Alas! I have not been able to clasp the enemy (I have not met her) It is very sad that we have not mingled with each other so far," (39)

The king, being in a different state of mind, could never realize, whether he was a male or a female. (boy or a girl). He was enamored in her love from head to foot. (extremely enticed in her love) (The king never realized the truth. In fact, due to his dual- mindedness, he was far from the truth.) (40)

"(O Aurangzeb!) Look at the fool, what type of painful state he was up to, as if he was having a Shava without the use of water." (without any achievement he was wasting his time and effort.) (42)

(O Aurangzeb! Like that king you are also behaving foolishly, without knowing what is right and wrong. You are troubling god-fearing saints without any purpose, for which you will have to be answerable to the Lord.)

Now the Guru prays to the Lord:- "O True Guru ! May I be bestowed with the true Name, so as to offer you my prayers with full faith (the treasure of my faith)." (43)

O True Lord! May you bless me with the (ever-green tumbler of) True Name, Which would be helpful in suppressing my sexual desires, the greatest enemy. (44)

Here the ninth parable is completed.

"By the Grace of one Lord-Supreme Victory to the Lord Almighty."

The benevolent Lord is the forgiver of all our vices and shortcomings (sins) and the destroyer of all lazy (careless and in attentive) men. O Lord! The administration (functioning) of the whole universe is controlled (managed) by you alone. (1)

The Lord has no son, no mother, neither he has any enemy nor any friend (no friend or foe).There is none else like him, (none to compare with him in greatness.) (2)

(O Aurangzeb !) I have heard the anecdote of the king of Mayandran land, who was having an enlightened soul (had a pure illuminated mind). He was renowned in the whole world as one having a pure soul. (3)

The king had a son, named Roshan Zamir, who was very charming with a illuminated-mind and was a leader of eminent chiefs. (leaders). (5)

The king was called Roshan Dil. He Had subjugated all his enemies with his bravery (prowess) and destroyed all his foes. (6)

He had a very wise and sagacious minister, who was a great well-wisher of the subjects and a destroyer of the enemies. (7)

The minister had a daughter who was glorious with her shining (elegant) appearance loke the light of lamp and was called Roshan damaag. (illumined mind) (8)

Both the children (king's son and minister's daughter) were sent to a school as they had been loitering around for quite some time earlier (without any purpose). (9)

Both the children were sent to the maulvi (religious Muslim leader) of great learning in the country of Rome (Room). The king had bestowed on him lot of wealth and land. (in grant). (10)

There were many other children studying there in that school. Each child used to study (the lesson) from his/her book. (11)

Each child would carry his books under the armpit and would bring religious books like Torait and Bible with great respect (veneration.) (12)

Two Schools were functioning for teaching seven languages, one for the boys and the other for the learning of girls. (13)

The boys were being taught by a scholarly Maulvi (religious leader), while the girls were being taught by a clever and intelligent woman teacher. (14)

The boy was influenced by the God of love (Kamdev) and became more passionate in his love, while the girl's body also developed into a beautiful young blonde. (21)

There was a rat living inside the wall of the school (dividing it into boy sand girls sections), which resulted in a hole in the wall. (23)

The beautiful girl shining elegantly like the moon and the sun-like boy of the Yaman land would glance at each other, through this hole in the wall.(24)

Both thus developed love for each other in this secret manner, which made them forget about their studies along with any consciousness of the world around. (They forgot about the studies or world around). (25)

Both of them got engrossed in their love affair so much that they lost hold of the reins .(bridle) from their hands and the feet also came out of the stirrups. (They got enamoured in their love so much, that they for got about their studies and lost their sense of proportion even.) (Their Minds were out of their control.) (26)

(The friends then told their teachers.) On seeing the plight of both their students, the boys 'teacher (Maulvi) and the girl's teacher called both of them and enquired about the whole affair. (28)

"O beautiful lady and the sun-like boy of the world! Tell us, why both of you are becoming Weaker day by day? What is the cause behind it?" (29)

When sometime had passed (two, three or four days had passed) their love affair was known to the public and everyone was talking about it openly. (33)

Then the haze of childhood had disappeared from their faces and like the spring season the son of youthfulness had appeared.(The childhood had given rise to youthful glamour.) (34)

The scholarly Maulvi (religious leader) had a daughter, who was very intelligent and beautiful. (35)

That young girl had realized from (seeing) their mental outlook that both were in love with each other. She took the girl to a secluded place and said to her in very sweet tongue (words). (36)

"O beautiful charming lady, tall like the cypress tree, having a body shining like silver and with the splendour of the sun and moon of the heavens!" (37)

"There is no distinction between you and me. Though we have two distinct forms, yet basically we are both alike, being girls, and there is no difference between us." (38)

"You must remember that in case someone hides anything from her friends, one commits a great sin. If you were to tell me the whole truth, then it would benefit both of us. (It will be good for both.)" (40)

"You tell me the whole truth and I will not disclose (leak it) to any one else." "By telling the truth you could dispel all my suffering which I am under going due to seeing your plight. (You could wash away my body and blood.)" (41)

"To keep away anything hidden (secret).from one's friends is a great sin. It is a great (mistake) oversight (omission) if .the kings were to keep anything secret (hidden) from their ministers." (42)

It is rather a good thing to tell one's friends the truth about everything and lay open one's mind to them, as the truth is appreciated by everyone, and by telling the truth, one's mind also gets purified.(One feels satisfaction within one's mind)' (43)

The Maulvi's daughter asked her many times, but the girl did not come out with anything. To find, out the truth from her, the girl talked to her in very sweet words. (But without success). (44)

The ministers daughter then gave a party, which was accompanied by music (fun and frolic) and wine was also served freely, so that all the participants were drunk and were enjoying the fun. (45)

All were completely intoxicated by consuming wine and were off their normal senses and they started licking their wounds by stating their inner feelings. (Being drunk with liquor all were pouring out their heart-felt grievances.) (46)

All others were talking about their normal feelings and routine things, Where as this girl was only repeating her lover's name and nothing else. (47)

Then the Maulvi's daughter arranged another party, where there were arrangements for musical displays along with dance and music. This assembly was specially meant for young and charming persons. (48)

In this assembly (party) people with wanton behaviour were drunk with wine and completely engrossed in dancing and music (fun and frolic).So they started talking of their self-arrangments. (49)

Whosoever talked to both of them (in love) about their studies or literature, 'they did not reply to those quarries. Both of them were only repeating the name of their beloved friend only in their state of drunkenness. (50)

When they forgot about their studies and talking of their own greatness; they were only talking about each other and giving out the friend's name. (51)

Whosoever had any old friendship with someone, was also repeating his name only with his tongue. (52)

The Maulvi's daughter thus realized from their talk that both these blooming youths (blossoming flowers) were in love with each other. In their talk they appeared to be of good and delicate nature with beautiful build up. (53)

It is a well-known fact that no one could keep secret affairs of love, essence, wine or murder. These things cannot be kept hidden and can be smelt openly. (get revealed). (54)

So it became known to everyone and this was the talk of the town that the king's son and the minister's daughter were in love and were openly flirting with each other.(sh0wing their love). (55)

The king, on learning (hearing) about this fact, sent for two boats and made them sit in different boats. (each one in a separate boat). (56)

The king then made these two boats afloat (leave) separately in a torrential river, but with (stormy conditions) both the boats came together (joined together). (57)

With the Will of the Lord (God's o-dains) both the boats mingled with each other just as the sun and the moon had got together. (mixed). (58)

Look at the divine will (God's - wonder) that with the God's Grace both the bodies were mingled with each other. (59)

Two bodies brought in two distinct boats were joined together.. The world's radiance (girl) and the sun of Yaman (boy) (got together) got united with each other. (60)

The boat then started moving and finally reached the deep river. The boat was then caught in the waves of the river like the leaves during the spring season. (61)

From the other side of the boat appeared a huge monster, who had opened up his arms like pillars, and appeared like a human without head. (63)

The boat came out between the two hands of the monster. When the poisonous cobra bit the monster (with its sting). (64)

The monster then held the cobra with his hands. So with the Grace of the Lord none of the two could harm the children. (They were saved). (65)

The cobra and the monster fought with each other so furiously that none of them came out alive from the river finally as per the Lord's Will. (both of them got killed in the river.) (66)

Then there was a storm brewing inside the river, with the tumultuous waves rising high up, but apart from the benevolent Lord no one else could know their origin. (67)

Then the boat continued its movement within those heavy, lashing waves. They were seeking Lord's Grace and benevolence to get rid of their suffering and panic. (68)

Suddenly a lion happened to approach there and watching them was keenly wishing to eat their flesh and swooped on them. (71)

In the meantime a crocodile came out of the river with the ordains of the Lord to eat them up. (devour them). (72)

In the meantime, the lion also had reached there suddenly and jumped into the river waters to kill the children. (73)

With the Lord's Grace and His ordains, both of them moved ahead. One was the king's son and the other, the minister's daughter. (77)

They reached a great massive jungle, where there could be no other saviour except the Lord Almighty. (78)

Both of them, looking gracious and good natured came to the land of Habash, one of them was the king's son and the other, the (beautiful) charming daughter of the minister. (79)

He then traced out all the enemies of the king in various places and then with the Lord's Will and Grace attacked them. (89)

By attacking the enemy and then spilling his blood (in a bloody battle) he would make him surrender. Then finding out about another rebellious type enemy, he would attack him also with great bravery (with strength). (90)

Then he managed to collect many helmets, protective coats of iron cloaks, coarse woolen bandage and Indian swords which were very costly and heavy (in weight). (99)

The warriors of his army were very brave and full of courage, Who were ready to confront (and kill) even lions and were ready to annihilate groups of mighty heroes. (102)

He himself was so brave that he could match the strength of an elephant and defeat him in battle. In the assembly of the men he was very shrewd (clever) and very smart in his hand movements. (103)

His strike with a pointed spear (would bleed the enemy to death) and the sharp swords were given a coating of poison. (104)

The minister's daughter also wore a turban on her head and collected some arrows in her quiver. (106)

The minister's daughter was made the commander of the troops' and the army moved like the waves of a river. (107)

The troops were made to depart like a huge army comparable to the cluster of dark black clouds. With their movement even the Earth was trembling and the moon felt wavered (lost its balance). (108)

When the troops reached the border of that kingdom. Then there was no need felt of more arms, arrow or swords. (109)

The whole army was fully armed with weapons like bayonets daggers which are called Gopal. (110)

As a result of this battle the land was ravished and looted, just as the winds of autumn denude the trees of their leaves. (112)

Having killed the enemy, they opened up the route to further advancement. The persons found on the outskirts were also wounded badly with facial and injuries. (113)

The fairy like daughter of the minister was furious with rage like the tigress. She was ready with her dagger to attack the enemy, taking her aim at any upcoming enemy. (114)

Wherever she would launch an attack, the enemies were killed and would take up prisoners wherever she went. (115)

The king of Mayindra also heard about this attack and rushed with great fury to that place. (116)

The king had organized his army fully like the spring festival, and the warriors were looking glorious armed with guns. Can nons, and daggers with poisoned blades. (117)

The warriors came down to the battle field like the deep river, flowing down. They had covered their bodies, from head to foot, with protective coating (of iron) and were armed with various weapons. (118)

The sound of firing pistols, and guns were being heard, and the land was covered with blood, and became red like poppy flower. (119)

The minister's daughter then came to the battle field. having the Chinese bow in one hand, and an arrow in the other hand. (120)

Wherever her arrows struck, they would pierce through the ribs of many men and hundreds of elephants. (They were killed). (121)

The swords of the warriors were striking and flashing just as the ripples strike a stone producing sparkles of light. (122)

When a flashing sword shone forth, then the blood and ground became red in colour and was shining. (The whole area was red with bloodshed). (123)

The Indian swords were shining like flashes of light in the battlefield, and the forces were thundering like the dark clouds resulting in torrential rains. (124)

The chinese bow and arrows alongwith the Indian swords held in the hands of the daughter of the minister were showing their wonders (in the battle field). (125)

The din of the battle cries, was being heard from miles even. The river was agitated (trembling) and the mountains also burst in to various parts (with the battle cries). (126)

When the swords of Yaman land were flashing across the battle field, both the Earth and the sky were illumined fully. (127)

When the delicate and beautiful body of the girl (minister's daughter) was agitated and was furious with rage, then the steel attached to the bamboos (of the spears) also got active with swiftness. (The spears were striking with force). (128)

When the troops engaged in the warfare in the battle field raised hue and cry, then the whole world was covered with the dust raised by the cannons and the spears flying around. (129)

The bows and traps used in the battle were trembling with furry and the Indian made swords with shining blades like mercury were flashing brilliantly. (130)

The blood thirsty daggers also became active and the spear with a blade protruding like the snake's tongue also came out furiously. (The daggers and spears were used freely). (131)

The brilliance of the weapons, in use all around, produced flashes of light throughout the battle field and the Earth (ground) filled with spilt blood became red coloured like the sulphur (brim stone). (132)

The noise of the shooting of guns and arrows was being heard all over, and the warriors looking like crocodiles were heaving sighs of pain (wounded) in the battle field. (133)

The arrows, shot from the bows, were producing a hissing noise and it appeared as if doomsday had dawned on the Earth (in the world) suddenly. (134)

The ground was littered with corpses, so that there was no room for the pedestrains to walk on the Earth. The birds, however, were not getting free space to fly in the air, as the sky was filled with the arrows, being shot around. (135)

The sword was wielded so furiously in the battlefield, without any check, that the Earth was covered with dead bodies, rising up to the height of mountain Kaaf. (Koh Kaaf). That is there were heaps of corpses piled up on each other. (136)

The heads and feet of the dead warriors lay in heaps on the ground, and it appeared as if the battle field was filled with the balls and pigeon holes. (137)

The arrows and bullets were moving from both the sides with such a speed, that the helmets and iron protective coatings of the warriors were broken into pieces. (138)

The swords had got heated up like the sun's heat so that the trees and the river waters had dried up (with heat). (139)

The arrows were shot like a shower with the speed of the lightning so that even the elephants had been cut off into pieces and lying separately at different places. (140)

Then a minister came to the battle field like a whirl wind, who was wielding a sword manufactured by Mayindras. (141)

From the other side, the minister's daughter, wielding a sword manufactured in India (Hindustan), entered the battle field. (142)

Both the swords struck each other and glittered with brilliance, which resulted in the enemy ranks completely getting confused and confounded (the enemy heart was broken). (143)

The girl struck the sword on the enemy's horse so powerfully, that his head was cut off (horse's head) and fell on the ground like a mountaintop (cliff). (144)

When she struck the sword a second time, the minister was cut into two pieces and fell down on the ground like a mansion. (145)

After the death of that minister, another warrior awooped on the battlefield like an eagle and the girl struck him down with her sword, and killed him . (146)

The first invader (attacher)-cum-minister, was killed and the girl had fell peace of mind. With the second killing of the warrior, her labour and hard work had been rewarded, and then a third warrior launched another attack . (147)

The third warrior was completely smeared with blood. It appeared as if he had come out of the door (smeared) of hell. (148)

That girl then killed him also, splitting (cutting) him into two pieces, just as a huge lion would kill a blue bull (Nilgai). (149)

After the death of the third warrior, the fourth one landed in the battle field with such a force, just as a panther swoops down on to an offspring of Nilgai. (150)

The minister's daughter struck him with the sword with such strength that he fell down from the horse's back onto the ground. (151)

Then the fifth warrior attacked like a big demon and she wounded him also with the Lord's Grace with one strike only. (152)

The beautiful girl (minister's daughter) had struck him with the sword so forcefully, that it pierced through his whole body. from head to foot, reaching the strap of the saddle (of the horse). (153)

Then after this incident no other warrior came forward for fighting against her in the battle. Even the most mighty warrior also never dared to face her in the battle field. (157)

Then the king of Mayindra came out personally to fight it out against her, and with his personal involvement, all the other warriors were filled with fury. (158)

Then both the Earth and sky were illumined when the swords of Yaman and Hindustan were wielded in the battle field. (160)

Thus from both the sides the use of bows (and arrows) along with lassos (rope ladders) was seen greatly and those struck down with the maces were wounded and heaving sighs of pain. (161)

The arrows and guns were being shot producing a cracking sound around the battle field and the whole ground was covered with blood, looking red coloured like the blooming poppy flowers. (162)

There was a great uproar and turmultuous noise in the battlefield. There was a great use of blood-thirsty daggers and swords in the battle. (163)

When that beautiful fairy (minister's daughter) comes to the battle field astride her horse, the angel of death (Israel) sounded the song of doomsday (for the foe). (When the brave girl entered the battle field then it was declared doomsday for the enemy forces) and there was great unproper all around. (165)

When the turmultuous noise (uproar) was heard in the battle field, the warriors were filled with rage, and their arms were restless with enthusiasm. (166)

The warriors then wielded their swords with such a force, due to their fury, that the whole Earth was covered with red coloured (costly)silken cloth. (with blood-shed). The uproar made by the warriours was comparable to the school children reading aloud their lessons in the primary language (stage). (167)

There were countless warriors killed in the battle field, and if one wanted to count them, it would be impossible. (168)

The king of Mayindra fled away from the battle field, as his most of the troops had been killed. (169)

Then the minister's daughter chased the feeling monarch and caught hold of him, and then imprisoned him. (170)

The girl then became the queen of that land (country) and the boy became the king of the land. Thus with the Lord's Grace they attained the kingdom of the land. (177)

("O Aurangzeb ! The boy and girl had developed true love for each other and after facing various hardships they reached a benign king and finally defeated the king of Maindran and themselves became the king of the land through God's Grace. You have similarly tried to annihilate the Khalsa, but no one can harm others who have faith in the Lord.")Then the Guru beseeches the Lord : "O my Lord! May I be blessed with Lord's True Name, so as to remove the curtain of my dual-mindedness and I could perceive my Lord with close proximity." (178)

May the Lord bestow me with Lord's True Name (tumbler of His love), which would be helpful to me for success in the battle of life.(against enemies). (179)

"O Lord ! You are the only support in case of hardships and sufferings. You alone arrange to amend (improve the spoiled tasks) of helpless people." (1)

That girl then was sitting on the banks of the river Jamuna and brought along with her some wine and roasted meat. She partook that wine and ate that meat. (16)

When six hours (2 pehars) of the dark night had gone by, she arranged to float down two stacks of grass down the river waters. (17)

When the warders (watchmen) saw these stacks in the light of the torches, they became very furious with rage. (18)

Those warders then directed many gun shots on these stacks (of grass) as if the clouds in monsoon were bursting into heavy showers accompained by lightning. (19)

That girl thus, caused to flow such stacks twice, thrice or four times (down the river). Finally the watchman felt sleepy and went to sleep. (20)

The girl now realised that the warders had gone to sleep. They felt so sleepy just like dead persons or just as wounded warriors go to rest. (21)

When the time keeper was striking the gong, she would insert a nail in the wall. (23)

Thus with the support of these pegs (of nails) she managed to reach the top of the huge wall. With the God's grace, she could see both the horses. (24)

Thus the girl struck the warder with her sword and cut him into two pieces. Then she struck the gate keeper and cut him also into two pieces. (25)

The seventh watchman was wounded seriously and he also died. Then with the God's grace, she laid her hands on the horse. (29)

She then rode the horse and struck him with the whip with force, so that he jumped over the wall, and reached the banks of river Jamuna. (30)

The horse then moving in the waters, swam across the river and came out. The king (of the land) saw all this and got bewildered. (wonder struck). (31)

Standing on the other side of the river, She said, "O king Shah! Why have you lost your senses? I had already taken the horse named Rahu, While the second horse Called Saroho has been presented (given) by you personally." (51)

Having said these words to the king. She (moved) rode away on the horse. She then remembered the Lord, the benevolent bestower, and thanked him for his grace. (52)

Then many horsemen followed her to catch her but none of them could manage to apporoach her or get hold of her. (53)

The warriors then threw their turbans before the king and said, "O king Emperor! The support of the whole world! Why did you allow her to escape?" (54)

"O king! who could get hold of those two horses, speeding like the deer ? You have handed over one horse yourself to him." (55)

"Why have you done this act of carelessness, lacking wisdom? The horse, Rahu had been stolen by him while the second horse Saroho had been presented to him by you, personally." (56)

The girl, thus took away both the horses, and then with Lord's Grace, she handed over these horses to her friend.' (57)

Then the lover of the girl married her and took her to the palace. With the Lord's Grace he kept up his promise, thus fulfilling it. (58)

(The Guru thus adviced Aurangzeb, through this parable, not toop press the subjects, as your kingdom will be wiped off by the forces of Khalsa, and for your false vows, you will have to suffer finally.)

The Guru then thanked the Lord and prayed to Him thus :-

"O Lord! May I be bestowed by you with the love of your True Name, (The tumbler of your worship and devotion) which will be of help to me in fighting against the evils of worldly pleasures (like sexual desires, wrath, greed etc." (59)

"By partaking this love of True Name (This tumbler of your devotion) it would be helpful in vanquishing the enemy. With one sip of this nectar, one could gain victory against the biggest enemy like an elephant." (O Lord ! May I be bestowed with your True Name, so as to destroy the worldly vices). (60)

That woman was really beautiful, as her appearance was full of charmand attraction. From her face she looked youthful but with her intelligence she was like an old woman (of wisdom). (9)

There used to live a Pathan called Hasan Khan, at the same place, where this woman used to abide. His intelligence was very young sharp. (He was very thoughtful and intelligent.) (10)

Both of them were in love with each other. Even Laila and Majnu's love was no match to their affection for each other (would feel ashamed before it). They also would feel their love interior (before this couple's love). (ll)

They were enamoured with each other's love so much, that they had no control over their love affair (was openly known) just as the feet in stirrups and bridle in hands being loosely held. . (12)

That woman then called her lover to her house all alone. As he came there, their sexual desires were arisen (to give vent to their inner feelings). (13)

When this love affair and their sensuous pleasures continued for almost two or four months, then some enemy of theirs informed Rahim about this affair. (14)

On hearing this news, the Pathan Rahim Khan was surprised and shocked. He unsheathed his sword and thundered with great wrathfulness. (15)

When that woman got the information about her husband's coming, then she took out her sword and cut off the head of her lover.(paramour). (16)

The woman then placed the flesh of this man into a kettle and pouring some spices over it started cooking it. (by lighting fire underneath). (17)

At first she served this meat (flesh) to her husband and then distributed the balance to her attendants as a feast. (18)

When the Pathan did not see any male member in the house, he went away satisfied and pleased, and then killed the person who had given this news. (19)

(O Aurangzeb !'There is lot of anarchy (lawlessness) in your regime and without verifying the truth you are involved in oppression as in the above case and your boat of sins would be soon sunk so you should stop this oppression.)

Then the Guru prays to the Lord:- O Lord-Guru 1 May I bebestowed with the nectar of your True Name, which would be neededby me in the war against vices and enemies. (20)

O Lord-sublime! May you bestow on me the tumbler of your love filled with True Name to its brim, which I would like to partake all the time, thus being forgetful (careless) of all the worries and sufferings of both the worlds. (Your True Name is the harbinger of permanent peace and eternal bliss. (21)

Here the twelefth parable is completed.

The Essence of Sri Guru Granth Sahib

This work involved me completely in the translation of Sri Guru Granth Sahib in English Prose and took me, to complete it, 10 years from 1990 to 2000. In fact this is the best part of my life, as the whole day was spent in studying and understanding each hymn and then writing its meaning first in Punjabi and then translating that Punjabi version into English Prose. The hymns of each page took two days to complete the job in English version, giving not the literal meanings, but the essence of each hymn, as understood by me. Of course, even a life time is not enough to deal with this subject, as Gurbani is too deep in its philosophy for any individual to really understandand then express it in a foreign language.

In fact, the Guru has clarified it by giving the final verdict by saying:

as such human being has his limitations, but the effort is always rewarded.

II. a) Philosophy of Sikh Gurus

i) This deals with the banis of Nitname, namely Jap Ji, Jaap Sahib, Sukhmani Sahib and Swaiyyais etc.

ii) This book is in two parts, the first part dealing with the meaning of the Gurbani and the second one giving its philosophy under ten headings.

b) The Four Pillars of Sikhism

There are four main pillars of Sikhism, namely Guru, Lord's will (Hukam) Sadh Sangat and Naam.

True Name is to be attained through the help and benevolence of the Guru. The Guru helps us to understand the meaning and purpose of human life, and then understanding Gurbani with its simple version and guidance through four main-supports.

c) The Eternal Bliss - It deals with the philoshphy of Anand Sahib by Guru Amar Das Ji. It helps us to understand the purpose and meaning of human life and understanding Sikh Philosophy with simple version of Gurbani and its guidance.

d) The Universal Message of Guru Granth Sahib. It deals with a simple explanation of the the philosophy of Sikhism and explained briefly with its meaning and objectives . All the hymns are listed. It is meant for those, who feel they have no time to read the full version or scope of the philosophy of Guru Granth Sahib. So in simple language, in few words it deals with the central idea of each hymn. in four volumes.

e) Zafarnama - Letter of Victory written by Guru Gobind Singh Ji to Aurangzeh at the end of hostilities. It poems a part of the present work (5 volumes).

All the hymns of Guru Granth Sahib, with Rehaou (ਰਹਾਉ) are listed and explained fully in Punjabi language.

g) I am proud to be a Sikh - briefly explains the beauty of Sikh tenets and Sikh philosophy
